Spring Moving

Great Britain appeared early today to be seizing the initiative in the Balkans.

While German troops in Bulgaria deployed along the Greek and Turkish frontiers, the following reports indicated Britain and her allies were not remaining idle:

1. From Belgrade the United Press reported that a big British expeditionary force from North Africa is being landed at the Piraeus port of Athens, for action on the Greek front.

2. Also from Belgrade came United Press reports that British transports were about to land troops at Salonika, key Greek port at the head of the Aegean Sea, barely 60 miles from where German mechanized forces are massed along the Bulgarian-Greek Macedonian border.

3. From Ankara the Associated Press reported that Turkey had received a Russian promise she need fear no attack from the Soviet should she enter the war on the British side.

4. In London, the British admiralty announced a British submarine "has torpedoed and sunk a heavily laden Italian troop transport." The Italian ship was said to be "of the Sicilia class of 9,646 tons." No other details were given.

5. In Yugoslavia, political and military leaders sped toward Belgrade in response to a call by Regent Prince Paul for a Crown Council meeting today to discuss Germany's demand for a quick Yugoslav signature to the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo pact. Though Yugoslavia was believed ready to reach some kind of agreement with the Axis, stiffening British pressure was reported delaying a complete capitulation to German demands.

Toll of 40 Transports

Diplomats in Belgrade heard, without any direct confirmation, that 40 British military transports arrived Tuesday at the Piraeus, heavily bombed Greek port on a hilly peninsula 5 miles southwest of Athens, and began unloading troops.

The British expeditionary force, the United Press said, was drawn from Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's Army of the Nile in Egypt and Libya after the shattering of Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's Italian North African forces.

For several days it had been reported in Belgrade that the British

Tragic Welcome

Assassin's Bomb Misses British Envoy Returning From Sofia

Two Killed, 23 Hurt As Blast Shatters Istanbul Hotel Lobby

By Witt Hancock,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Istanbul (Wednesday), March 12. George W. Rendel, the former British minister to German-occupied Bulgaria, escaped assassination last night in a bomb explosion in the lobby of the Pera Palace Hotel here, but two other persons were killed and 23 injured.

Rendel himself, apparently the main intended victim, was unhurt. One of the dead was identified early today as a Turkish plainclothes policeman. Some among the injured were reported near death, but most of them were not seriously hurt.

Among those hurt—but all only slightly—were three members of Rendel's staff—First Secretary Lambert and two girl typists.

Rendel, who had arrived at the hotel to take up residence after breaking British relations with Bulgaria, had just gone to his rooms—and that circumstance perhaps saved him from injury or death. His daughter, Anne, also was unhurt.

The bomb burst in the lobby of the Pera Palace, a large stone structure one block from the United States consulate, just ten minutes after the British party had entered.

Rendel's daughter, a tall dark girl of 20, had acted as legation hostess in Sofia for the last 18 months in place of her mother, who is running a hospital canteen in London. She showed the same imperturbability that she did in Sofia when she drove a car flying the British flag through the streets on the first day of the German occupation.

She was in the hotel lobby at the time of explosion. This was her description:

"As near as I could tell, the floor just flew up."

So scattered were the effects of the blast that among the injured were persons who had been standing in the hotel doorway and even some in the street.

The hotel lobby was wrecked and some damage was done to the floor above. Windows in buildings across the street were smashed.

The police began an investigation based on a tentative theory that the bomb might have been planted in one of the Britons' luggage.

House Concurs In Lease-Lend Changes, 317-71, Awaits Estimates

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

With the lend-lease bill sealed, delivered and signed, Congress last night stood by for $7,000,000,000 in estimates to finance a two years' arms flow to Britain.

Enabling legislation was completed by a 317-to-71 record vote of the House, then Congressional committees marked time for the next step—voting of funds to mobilize the vast arms effort behind Britain.

President Roosevelt will follow up yesterday's informal request with specific estimates to Speaker Rayburn today. A waiting House Appropriations Subcommittee will go to work on the figures tomorrow. Next week a bill to implement the vast aid program with funds will reach the House floor.

Key Congressional committeemen received word of the financing at the White House a few hours before the House completed the aid bill's two-months' journey through Congress.

"We Are One People"

House action came on full concurrence in Senate modifying amendments. Amid Republican and Democratic appeals for unity, House Minority Leader Martin led a large bloc of Republicans to support of the Senate changes.

"We may differ among ourselves," said Martin in debate, "but there is no division in our loyalty to our country or our determination to protect the security of our people. We are one people; an undaunted people determined that real Americanism shall not perish from the vote."

Ninety-four Republicans and 3 Progressives voted with 220 Democrats "to concur," as against 24 Republicans and 236 Democrats who voted for the bill on original passage, February 8.

Confers With Leaders

Fifty-four Republicans, 15 Democrats, 1 Farmer-Laborite and 1 American-Laborite refused to concur. This compared with 135 Republicans, 25 Democrats, 3 Progressives, 1 Farmer-Laborite and 1 American-Laborite who shouted "no" on original passage.

Broad outlines of the aid project ahead meanwhile were discussed at the White House with Senate and House ranking members of the Appropriations, Military Affairs and

BRITISH AID IS LAW—The lend-lease bill for aid to Britain became law yesterday at 3:50 p. m. as President Roosevelt affixed his signature (left) to the historic measure. With four of the pens used in signing the act in his hand, the President surveys the completed job (right) with a somber look

President Starts Help to Greece, England With Ink Barely Dry

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday signed into law the lend-lease bill, and under it immediately ordered release of a first consignment of arms for Great Britain and Greece.

Eager to save every minute, the President signed the measure at 3:50 p. m., ten minutes after a courier from Capitol Hill had brought it to the White House door, approved the shipment of war materials five minutes later and at a 4 o'clock press conference announced his swift steps to the public.

Some time next week, the President said, he will speak to the Nation by radio to explain the vast program of aid to embattled foes of Germany, Italy and Japan.

Armed with virtually all the power he had asked for to make America the arsenal and larder of Axis enemies, Mr. Roosevelt appeared eager to show the world that a democracy can act swiftly in time of crisis.

Part For Greece

He said that the exact items approved for transfer to Britain and Greece and their value would not be made public until the information lost military value; that the equipment was from Army and Navy stocks; that most of it would go to Britain and part to Greece, and that this first shipment was not a very large amount.

Brimming once more with confidence, Mr. Roosevelt told reporters that none of the equipment was yet on its way overseas, at least it wasn't at 3:55 p. m., but he indicated it would be sent as soon as it could be shipped in British or other foreign bottoms.

None of the equipment had been moved to embarkation points or crated in anticipation of final passage of H. R. 1776, the President said.

The Chief Executive, acting also in the role of Commander in Chief, appeared chiefly interested in speeding weapons of war across the Atlantic, less interested in other aspects of newly granted powers.

Unconcerned With Details

When a reporter asked whether the transactions with Great Britain and Greece would be lending or leasing, the President replied that he was not interested.

Asked if a bookkeeping system had been set up to keep track of what material is sent abroad, Mr. Roosevelt said he did not know.

He said flatly that no deal or swap has been concluded with Great Britain or Greece in connection with the transfers of goods, and added that if a deal is made he will make

Greeks Facing Nazis Ordered To Stand Firm

Thracian Defenses Bolstered as Albanian Offensive Rolls On

By Ben Ames.
United Press Staff Writer

Athens (Wednesday) March 12.—The Greek government today ordered its forces facing the frontier of German-occupied Bulgaria to stand stubbornly "for the defense of Greece" and reported savage fighting in the Greeks' five-day-old offensive on the Albanian front.

The Greek offensive, according to the official war office spokesman, yesterday seized "an entire Italian fortified region" in the central sector near Tepeleni after a dawn-to-dusk battle.

The Italian forces in Albania, although putting up stiff resistance and attempting one counter-attack after another, were said officially to have been driven in retreat and to have suffered heavy casualties.

The high command reported the taking of 450 more prisoners—bringing the five-day total to near the 3,000 mark—which included many officers, of whom "three are above the rank of major."

Greek and British planes aiding the land offensive were said to have inflicted "terrible bombing damage."

Kostas Kozzias, former Governor of Athens, has arrived in Thrace adjoining the Bulgarian frontier, north of strategic Salonika, to take charge of defense measures as the new military governor, it was announced.

Kozzias, arriving in the danger zone of Germany's Balkan menaces, immediately issued a proclamation ordering police and local authori-

Rep. Schwert Dies; Stricken At Banquet

Had Just Spoken In Praise of Friend; Once a Ball Player

Representative Pius R. Schwert (Democrat), of New York, collapsed and died last night a few minutes after making a brief speech at a dinner party in the Annapolis Hotel.

The 48-year-old Congressman from Buffalo had just concluded a eulogy of Frank Bennett, president of the Railway Mail Association, when he suffered a heart attack.

Mrs. Betty Burns, wife of Harry Burns, secretary to Senator Mead, attempted to revive the Representative by breathing into his mouth, but Mr. Schwert succumbed en route to Emergency Hospital.

Guests at the party said that the last words of Representative Schwert were wishes for a long and happy life for Bennett and the latter's bride of a few days. Bennett had held the party to announce his wedding February 22 to his secretary, the former Ella Hildebrandt.

Mrs. Schwert and Senator Mead, who preceded Mr. Schwert as Representative from the Forty-second New York District, were at the stricken legislator's side while he was rushed to the hospital in an ambulance.

Senator Mead said that Representative Schwert was in a jovial mood and showed no signs of ill health during the speech.

In Congress yesterday the Buffalonian had voted to concur in the Senate version of the lend-lease bill.

A former major league baseball player, who was catcher for the New York Yankees for three years, Mr. Schwert was elected to Congress in November, 1938, and was

Shooting Gallery Customer Turns Pistol on Himself

Half a dozen bystanders saw a 35-year-old man put a pistol to his head and pull the trigger last night in a Ninth Street shooting gallery. He was critically wounded.

The man, identified as Pedro Rosello, of 1730 Eighteenth Street Northwest, took one shot at a target with a revolver at Capital Gun Club, 406 Ninth Street Northwest, then turned the weapon to his head.

"Don't do that!" shouted the attendant, George H. Webster, of 1015 G Street Southwest.

"I thought he was playing," Webster said later. "But before I knew it he had pulled the trigger and he went down on the pavement."

No one else was in the gallery, but a number of passersby saw the shooting from the sidewalk and across the street. At Emergency Hospital, Rosello was given slight chance to live.

Baldwin Elected To Simpson's Seat

New York, March 11 (INS).—Joseph Clark Baldwin, Republican candidate sponsored by Wendell L. Willkie, was elected tonight to succeed the late Kenneth Simpson in the House of Representatives.

Baldwin received 23,252 votes as against 16,690 for his Democratic opponent, Dean Alfange, who had the support of President Roosevelt.

Eugene Connolly, American Labor Party, received 2,985 votes.

Britain Preparing to Man U. S. Ships, Planes; Matsuoka Berlin Trip Called Reply to Aid Bill

By the Associated Press

Berlin, March 11.—The coming visit to Axis capitals of Japanese Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka and a staff of military experts is one of the replies which the United States must expect to the British Aid Bill, authorized German spokesmen indicated today.

They left it free for anyone to guess what the concrete result will be of this first visit of a Japanese foreign minister to the Third Reich.

But the synchronization of Matsuoka's departure from Tokyo with final stages of passages of the British aid bill, plus the disclosure here that military men will be with him, make it certain that America will figure in the discussions.

One angle upon which the German press significantly expands is the strength of the Japanese Navy.

(Italian sources, in Rome, gave the impression that Hitler and Mussolini would hold that the British aid bill is tantamount to American entrance into the European conflict, hence, it calls for fulfillment of Japanese obligations under the 3-power pact.

(The Turin Gazzetta del Popolo said, "If we look at it—the bill—in substance . . . it must be considered equivalent to entrance into the war." La Tribuna said, "The quick departure of Matsuoka for Berlin and Rome constitutes an immediate reply to the Washington threat." It added: "If the Axis powers were enemy No. 1 for England, Japan was enemy No. 1 for the United States. That is why Roosevelt blames us for coming to an under-

London, March 11.—The fleet and the R. A. F.—Britain's mightiest arms of war—are ready to strike for victory in the developing Battle of the Atlantic with the vast supply of weapons now expected from the United States, official informants declared publicly and privately today.

Speaking for the Royal Air Force, Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair assured Commons amid the cheers of the members:

"Herr Goebbels (the Nazi propaganda minister) tells his German dupes that American help for Britain will arrive too late. But I tell this House that splendid aircraft—the choicest fruit of American design and craftsmanship—will get here in time!"

As to the navy, a high British informant said unofficially, in reply to the questions of newspaper correspondents, that Britain has enough trained personnel ready to man the entire American fleet if it were turned over to Britain for the crisis ahead.

He did not elaborate on that angle, but he said that the British wanted every American ship they could get.

Skeleton formations of fliers, seamen and soldiers already have been trained, it was disclosed by neutral sources, to man without loss of time, airplanes, ships, mosquito boats, tanks and guns from across the sea.

United States military, naval and air experts for more than four months have been working in cooperation with the British so that these arms may be quickly absorbed and quickly put to use, these sources declared.

Defense Clanging Brings Lawsuit

Cleveland, March 11 (AP).—National defense is thundering so mightily at one Cleveland factory that 250 nearby residents today appealed to court.

They sought to hush a battery of hanging steam hammers at the Steel Improvement & Forge Co., which has a $3,000,000 order for airplane crankcases and torpedo parts.

"Nobody can sleep, day or night," said the complainants' attorney. "And our houses are falling apart—plaster and foundations are cracking." He suggested the company buy more hammers and operate daytime only.

"We just can't buy more hammers," responded Vice President William H. Sterling. "The Government is begging us for crankcases."

The residents' attorney, John Mihelich, said, "My clients are mostly employed in defense industries and must have their sleep to give their best at their jobs." The court postponed action.

Indictments Say Nazi Propagandists Neglected to Register as Foreign Agents

Three indictments by a special grand jury here yesterday accused Dr. Manfred Zapp and his Transocean News Service of flooding the United States with Nazi propaganda for more than two years.

The grand jurors said Zapp sent out 60,000 free copies of the White Paper in which Germany blamed President Roosevelt for the war and got an American publisher to pay for them.

Seized in New York, Zapp posted $10,000 bond. If convicted he would be liable to a possible $16,000 fine and 22 years in prison. His aide, Guenther Tonn, posted $5,000 bond. If convicted he might be fined $1,000 and jailed two years.

The indictments were the product of three months of secret inquiry. There may be more, as the investigation is scheduled to go on for several weeks at least. Dr. Freidrich Ernst Auhagen, German writer, was indicted last week and is due to surrender here Friday.

Zapp has offices here and in New York and has been close to persons high in the German Embassy. He is manager of the American branch of the German Transocean News Service. The grand jury said Zapp's function was "in furthering the interests of the government of Germany and the interests and ideologies of the National Socialist German Workers (Nazi) Party by . . . engaging in the placing and disseminating within the United States of oral, written and pictoral information."

This information, said the grand jury, was political propaganda which came out of Berlin after "censoring, editing and rewriting under the control of the German government."

The grand jury said the censors released only material which would further the interests of the German government and the Nazi Party.

To spread his propaganda, the grand jury charged, Zapp set up a German language newspaper called "Die Neue Woche" in this country. He used both his own name and those of Hermann Nille and Otto W. Hermann, the indictments said.

Zapp, Tonn and the news agency came afoul of American law, the

Send France Food, Bullitt Urges

American food for unoccupied France was urged yesterday by William C. Bullitt, former Ambassador to Paris, in an address before the Women's National Press Club.

At the same time Bullitt appealed for this country to arouse itself from confidence in the protection afforded by the Atlantic Ocean, confidence which he likened to that placed by the French in the Maginot Line.

Hospital Inspector Denies Acts Prejudicial to Group Health

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

While insisting that his inspection of five District hospitals in 1937 had nothing to do with Group Health Association, an American Medical Association official yesterday admitted that he checked the institution's staff rosters to determine which members were affiliated with the District Medical Society.

"Was this part of your study an outgrowth of the Mundt resolution?" Dr. Carl M. Peterson was asked by John Henry Lewin, prosecutor of the Government's antitrust case against organized medicine.

"Yes," the witness replied.

The Mundt resolution, adopted by the A. M. A. in 1934, recommends that American hospitals have on their staffs only physicians who are members in good standing of their local medical societies.

It is the Government's contention, in the doctors' trial now in progress in District Court, that the resolution was used as a weapon to keep out of hospitals G. H. A. staff doctors, as well as those attached to other prepayment group practice clinics frowned upon by the A. M. A.

The five hospitals inspected by Dr. Peterson, at that time a field investigator for the medical association's council on medical education and hospitals, were Columbia, Georgetown, George Washington, Providence and Washington Sanitarium.

He testified that he came here from Chicago headquarters at the British Supply Council Happy Aid Bill Is Law

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

The news that H. R. 1776 had become a law swept through the offices of the British Supply Council in North America yesterday and caused great joyousness.

The fact is that the Britishers—purchasing men, technicians and other experts—have been in a doldrums here since last fall. Great Britain, they explain, ran out of American dollars back in November, and since then they have been forced to mark time so far as purchases were concerned.

That embarrassing situation is now ended. Britain no longer has to worry about dollars; neither does Greece or China. Under the Act to Promote the Defense of the United States, to use the formal title of the lend-lease bill, this country becomes an "arsenal" where a British requisition for planes, ships and tanks won't have to be backed up with dollars. Winston Churchill will now get the "tools" for which he asked, and aid-to-Britain will evolve from a crawl to a sprint.

Hence the jubilation yesterday on the ninth floor of the Willard Hotel, where is located the British Supply Council. Under the council, of which Arthur B. Purvis is chairman, come the British Purchasing Commission, the British Air Commission and the British Admiralty Technical Mission.

Atmosphere Is British

A great many of the employes of the Purchasing Commission in the Willard are smart-looking American girls, but the atmosphere is British. Beyond the guards and the wire barriers are posters such as adorn the walls of London: "Chins Up," "There'll Always Be an England," and the warning, "Careless Talk Costs Lives."

The various British units here all grew out of what, in the early days of the European war, was the Anglo-French Purchasing Board. This set up headquarters in New York in December, 1939. The British and French began buying planes and other weapons in a rather casual way. In those days, the Britishers here now confess, they, as well as the French, were counting heavily on the Maginot Line.

With the fall of France in June, the Anglo-French purchasing board vanished. The British took over the French contracts for aircraft and machine tools. But though Britain's liabilities were almost doubled, her assets were almost halved. On top of this, the United States began to expand its armaments, and the British found that they had to deal more and more with Washington.

Commission Expands

The British Purchasing Commission which is headed by Sir Clive Ballieu, an Australian, took over the entire ninth floor of the Willard, but that was just a beginning. Now it has taken over a whole floor in the Hibbs Building, 725 Fifteenth Street Northwest, and also space in the building at 729 Fifteenth and in the Adams and Marshall Buildings.

The British Air Commission, which is headed by Sir Henry Self, has taken over what used to be the most opulent apartment house in Washington, the structure at Eighteenth street and Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, which numbered among its tenants the late Andrew Mellon.

The British Admiralty Technical Mission has its headquarters in Ottawa, but the prospect is that it, too, may move here. A British shipping expert is now reported to be on his way here to do something about Britain's gravest problem, the transportation of those things which the American arsenal is going to turn out for John Bull.

Britain Preparing To Man U. S. Arms

Available defense material has been distributed as widely as possible, so that many Britons could become accustomed to it.

The generally accepted theory that the perhaps decisive struggle in the Atlantic already is under way was supported by the admiralty itself in announcing that British, Allied and neutral sea losses for the week ended March 2 were the heaviest since last October—148,038 tons.

"The spring blitz which Hitler promised has begun," said an authorized source.

Sir Archibald's speech to Commons—despite his acknowledgment that the war was "about to enter a grimmer phase"—was one of the most optimistic reports he ever had made.

Confident of Victory

Barring the use by Hitler of "a more effective secret weapon than any he has yet managed to produce," the minister said, British planes will outfight and outdo the Nazis.

In the past ten months, he said, British fliers have destroyed 4,250 German and 1,100 Italian planes and lost "fewer than 1,800 aircraft of our own.

"I hope," Sir Archibald went on, "that the house will not have long to wait for further news of American aircraft which are now in service or coming into service overseas and in all four operational commands of the R. A. F. at home."

To match the growing German submarine threat, he said, "airdromes have been developed from which our aircraft may guard more easily the western approaches."

Kirwan Speeds Aid Bill to Roosevelt In Taxicab Dash

By the Associated Press

A Congressman's crosstown dash in a taxicab with the British aid bill under his arm enabled President Roosevelt to sign that historic measure yesterday soon after Congressional action was completed.

Congressional leaders turned the measure over to Chairman Kirwan (Democrat), of Ohio, of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, who hailed a taxi and made the mile trip to the White House in fast time.

Material aid for China would be postponed for a while, probably until after Lauchlin Currie, White House adviser, reports on a trip to China from which he is returning. The report by Currie, who reached the West Coast yesterday by clipper plane, would be a factor in deciding on what help will be sent to the Chiang Kai-shek government, the President said.

The President made it plain that he would keep Congress continuously informed of moves he makes under H. R. 1776. He said that, at a conference yesterday morning, he had invited the House and Senate Appropriations Committees to appoint small subcommittees to keep in touch with the White House on the aid program.

The President's entire day was devoted to action under the lend-lease powers. Its climax, signing of the bill, was without ceremony.

In the morning the President met for over an hour with House and Senate leaders, to whom he disclosed his intention to ask today for the billions to run the air program.

This meeting was followed by a conference with War Secretary Stimson, Acting Navy Secretary Forrestal, Chief of Staff George C. Marshall, Acting Chief of Naval Operations Admiral Royal E. Ingersoll, Army Quartermaster General Maj. Gen. Edmund B. Gregory and Rear Admiral Ben Moreel, chief of the Navy Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Presumably at this conference approval of the first shipment of arms under the lease-lend bill was decided. Under the new law, the President is required to consult with the Chief of Staff and Chief of Naval Operations before transferring existing Army and Navy equipment to a foreign government.

The Chief Executive lunched with Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the World War Industries Board, a frequent White House caller and intimate adviser.

As the House put finishing touches on the aid measure, the President held a conference with Attorney General Robert H. Jackson.

Then, at 3:40 p. m., Michael J. Kirwan (Democrat), of Ohio, chairman of the House Committee on Enrolled Bills, arrived at the White House with the official copy of the bill.

Ten minutes later, President Roosevelt, in the presence of members of his secretariat and news photographers, affixed his signature.

He used six pens, which will be presented to Congressional leaders.

The material that will be sent abroad is understood to include planes, machine guns, tanks, munitions, food and, possibly, some "mosquito boats."

Some of the tiny, fast torpedo boats were said to have been in the first consignment, as well as small tanks for use in the mountainous regions of Greece.

It was understood that Britain will soon receive several American "flying fortresses" and Navy patrol bombers, capable of long distance flights with heavy loads of bombs.

The President told his press conference that the first shipments abroad would not include any Maritime Commission vessels.

He was questioned extensively by reporters about the cost of his aid program. He said he did not know exactly how much Great Britain and Greece would be billed for the first shipments. He had an overall figure for the original cost of the equipment, the President said, but many of the articles were now out of date or surplus, or had depreciated in value in some other way.

His request for $7,000,000,000 will carry the aid program for more than a year, the President said, but he could not say whether another request would be necessary before the law expires June 30, 1943.

The program will be administered through regular Government channels, he told a questioner.

Recently the President has been making preparations in conference with the heads of the War, Navy, State and Treasury Departments.

It was considered likely yesterday that this same group, come to be known as a "war Cabinet," would continue to direct the aid effort.

Mr. Roosevelt said, in answer to a question, that he had not even heard a report that he would proclaim a state of full national emergency.

Congress to Receive Roosevelt's Aid Estimates Today

Naval Affairs Committees.

The President told the group he had decided to ask for $7,000,000,000 cash, covering the life of the lend-lease legislation. In this amount he included the $1,300,000,000 made available by the lend bill for immediate loans from existing Army and Navy equipment. This would be used by the President for Army and Navy replacement purposes, to prevent any impairment of defense. The "new money" for Britain would thus amount to only $5,700,000,000.

Spokesmen for the group said the President broke down the $7,000,000,000 estimate into nine or ten categories, including ordnance, ships, planes, artillery and agriculture. In his letter to Rayburn today he is expected to recommend amounts to be earmarked for each category. The $1,300,000,000 for immediate aid purposes would be included as a separate category.

Every known item needed for British assistance, cargo ships, fast small boats, planes, tanks, rifles, cannon, ammunition and foodstuffs, would be grouped under their various headings and appropriated for en bloc in the same bill.

One item vital to Britain's defense—mosquito boats—was touched on briefly. It was said that the United States has about 30 of these fast-moving "skippers" and in a month or so will be able to turn out one a day.

Senator Glass, of Virginia; Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, and Representative Woodrum, of Virginia, chatted with reporters briefly at the White House, disclosing only the outlines of the program. For details, newsmen were referred to the President's message today.

Among Appropriations committeemen conferring with the President was Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, making his first trip to the White House under the Roosevelt regime. Taber submitted a number of queries to the President, but made no public comment on the program. He said he would consider the estimates "on their merits" when they are presented to the Appropriations Committee.

Criticism of the proposals appeared confined to those who most bitterly fought the lend-lease bill.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, opposition leader, said he would make no effort to cut down the $7,000,000,000 appropriation "or in any way tie the hands of the President." Wheeler said he expected "also to vote for very large increases in taxes which are going to be necessary to carry out this bill." He said the taxpayers should know "this is just a starter."

Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, charged the size of the appropriation in effect would "nullify" the Byrd purse string amendment. "If you vote enough money all at once to carry out the program for two years," said Taft, "Congress loses control of the program."

Senator Bulow (Democrat), of South Dakota, another opponent, said he didn't want to handicap the President, "but it looks like to me $7,000,000,000 is pretty dern much money."

Administration Senators and House members pointed to advantages in continuity and smooth performance of the program in providing the aid in one sum, likewise stressing the favorable moral effect on Britain's resistance to the Axis.

While the Senate rested, after its three-week debate marathon, the House ordered full speed to implement the aid program. Following House concurrence on the lend bill, Representative Woodrum said his Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee will open hearings on aid estimates tomorrow. Secretary of State Hull is expected to be the first witness.

The House had allowed two hours to debate the final step in lend-lease enactment, but did not use all of it. Most of the time was consumed by Republican opponents of the bill who wanted to explain they were voting for the Senate amendments but not for the bill.

House Minority Leader Martin told the House he considered the amendments inadequate, but an improvement, 'and for that reason I shall vote in favor of them."

Majority Leader McCormick called on members to "rally behind our President now that the bill is to become law, not as Republicans, not as Democrats, but as Americans." He was applauded as he called the bill a "peace measure" aimed at staving off war and preserving "the way of life we believed in."

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, who led the original House fight against the bill, reasserted his opposition to the measure but said he favored the amendments and would vote for them.

He declared 95 per cent of House members favored aid to Britain, and charged delays should be laid to the Administration because of the form of the aid bill.

Strike Delays Ammunition Plant Erection

By the Associated Press

Strikes in widely separated industrial areas continued yesterday to slow down work on some national defense materials.

A walkout of 120 A. F. L. building laborers working on construction of a $12,000,000 small-arms ammunition plant in St. Louis, Mo., caused a stoppage of work among carpenters, electricians and steam shovel operators. The plant is being built under Government contract by a Western cartridge company subsidiary.

The company said the strike came as the result of the firm's legal inability to give permanent job passes to union business agents. Such passes, the firm said, are limited by Government order to men actually at work on the job.

Progress in negotiations for a settlement of differences at the two Birmingham, Ala., fabricating plants of the Ingalls Iron Works Co., was reported by John Beckman, representative of the National Defense Commission. The A. F. L.'s structural iron workers have postponed a proposed strike at the commission's request. They seek wage increases and protection against layoffs. The company fabricates steel for use in a $100,000,000 shipbuilding job.

Nathan E. Cowan, C. I. O. subregional director, said a strike at the Bethlehem steel plant in Lackawanna, N. Y., is "imminent" unless the firm "complies" with a Government-drafted agreement which ended a 38-hour strike last month. The union, claiming 10,000 members out of 14,000 employes, contended the management refused to discuss grievances last Friday.

Reinstatement of suspended workers and the question of holding a collective bargaining election were proposals up for settlement.

C. I. O. steel workers were on strike at the plant of the J. G. Brill Co., Philadelphia, at work on $418,661 in artillery and ammunition orders. The men, among the firm's 1,500 workers asked for higher wages, a union shop and vacation and seniority concessions.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday that strikes had increased from 160 in December to 220 in January.

The January strikes involved some 85,000 workers, the bureau said, with a loss of 625,000 man-days of work.

The January totals are the latest tabulated by the bureau, which keeps a monthly check on strikes and labor disputes. The January total of 220 compares with a five-year average for January, 1935-1939, of 170 involving an average of 61,742 workers and an average of 1,012,665 man-days lost.

LaGuardia, Bus Union Heads to Meet

By International News Service

New York, March 11.—New York's greatest bus strike, in its second day, was still far from settlement tonight as 900,000 New Yorkers waded through slush and water to overtax already crowded subways and elevated trains.

Mayor LaGuardia, who flew to Washington this morning, returned to City Hall late this afternoon and immediately conferred with John A. Ritchie, chairman of the boards of the Fifth Avenue Coach Co. and the New York City Omnibus Corporation.

At the conclusion of the conference, he said:

"I cannot effect an agreement with only one side."

The mayor indicated that Allan Haywood, C. I. O. director of organization, would confer with him tomorrow. He declared that he was "unable to understand" the union's attitude.

The strike drove most of the 900,000 persons accustomed to use buses daily to the already crowded subways or to the equally congested elevated lines, and the millions of regular users of these facilities were discommoded and delayed by the extra rush.

Dies Committee Blames Communists

The Dies committee said in a statement last night that Communist leadership in the Transport Workers Union was responsible for an "utterly unreasonable attitude of the union leaders" directing the New York bus strike.

The walkout was described by the committee as "a strike without merit and without prospect of advancing the interests of the members of the Transport Workers Union."

The committee said that the union "is one of the affiliated unions of the C. I. O. in which Communist leadership has entrenched itself."

The committee made public a 17-page summary of its investigation of what it said were Communist influences in the Transport Workers Union.

The summary quoted Thomas H. O'Shea, first president of the union, as testifying before the committee that he had been a member of the Communist Party and was appointed president of the union by the party.

New Contract Drawn to Cut Cost of Ships

By Alfred Friendly

Post Staff Writer

A new contract form, representing a radical departure from past Government purchasing methods and designed to prevent a repetition of the Bethlehem shipbuilding controversies of World War I, has been agreed to by the builders of the 200-vessel emergency fleet, it was learned yesterday.

The contract, which provides that the Maritime Commisison will do the actual purchasing of almost all the materials going into the ships, places a premium on speed and labor efficiency of the builders and penalizes delays and high costs.

Although details of the contracts are still under negotiation, the general principles have been accepted by both the builders and the commission, it was reported.

$110,000 for Each Ship

These are:

Costs plus a flat fee to the builders of $110,000 for each ship.

A bonus of $400 for each day by which the scheduled delivery date is beaten, and a penalty of like amount for each day of delay.

A bonus of 50 per cent of the saving which the builder is able to effect over the anticipated labor cost of the ship, and a penalty of 33 per cent of any excess above the anticipated cost.

A minimum guarantee of a $60,000 fee to the builders for each ship, and a maximum payment of $140,000.

The saving in labor cost, it was explained, cannot come from a reduction in the rates paid to the workers, since wages are to be maintained at the prevailing scale. The saving, if any, will be derived by reducing the number of man-hours determined beforehand by the commission and builders as necessary to construct each vessel.

U. S. Pays for Yards

Under this arrangement, it was pointed out, the abuses of "cost-plus" building contracts of World War I, in which it was to the contractors' advantage to run up costs, will be avoided. Instead, there will be an incentive to keep costs low, because all saving to the Government will be shared in by the builders.

Effort to Stiffen Greek Resistance Seen in Aid Move

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt's action in sending war materials to Greece today was regarded as a possible sign that he expects the little nation to continue its fight regardless of any attacks by Nazi forces in Bulgaria.

This was the principal explanation offered in speculation as to his reasons. Some advanced the possibility that Mr. Roosevelt might have received word from Athens that Greece has no more idea of capitulating to the Nazis than she did to the Italians.

At the very least, it was thought that the President was endeavoring to encourage the Greeks to continue their stand against invasion.

The Gallup Poll

Final Survey on Lease-Lend Measure Showed 2 to 1 in Favor of Passage

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., March 11.—A final survey of public opinion completed on the day the Senate passed the lease-lend bill found 56 per cent definitely in favor of the bill, 27 per cent definitely opposed, while 8 per cent gave qualified answers and 9 per cent expressed no opinion. The ratio between the definitely "yes" and definitely "no" in the survey results was almost exactly the same as the vote in the Senate last Saturday—2 to 1.

The Institute has studied public opinion on the measure from the beginning of the debate to the end. A series of four surveys, each complete in itself, beginning on February 1 and ending March 8, shows a slight net increase during that period in the number of persons definitely in favor of passing the bill, and a somewhat larger increase in the number definitely opposed to the bill. Those with qualified opinions diminished in number. The trend follows:

"Do you think Congress should pass the President's lease-lend bill?"	Feb. 9	Feb. 14	Feb. 28	Mar. 8
Yes	54%	58%	55%	56%
No	22	21	29	27
Qual'd Opinion	15	14	11	8
No Opin	9	7	14	9

By the time the Senate voted, national sentiment was in favor of Congressional action on the measure rather than a continuation of debate. As of Saturday morning, the day the bill passed, 67 per cent reached in the survey believed Congress should vote on the bill one way or the other, while only 22 per cent thought the debate should continue, and the rest had no opinion. Those who thought it was time for action included many not definitely in favor of the bill. The attitude of the majority is summed up in the comment of a Cleveland voter who said:

"If we're going to help England, let's get on with it. This bill, or one just like it, is bound to pass. So why muss around?"

Public sentiment for the lease-lend measure is consistent with certain basic aims which the Institute has repeatedly shown to characterize public thinking on foreign policy. Those aims have been, first, to help England, and second, to stay out of war.

As a measure for carrying out the first aim—aid to England—the lease-lend bill has been accepted by the public. As for the question whether the measure will result in sending American doughboys to Europe to fight—as opponents of the measure have predicted—the largest number of voters think it will not. An additional question in the survey just completed, asked:

"If the lease-lend bill is passed, do you think it will result in sending an American Army abroad to fight?"

Yes	31%
No	47
Qualified answers or don't Know	22

Whats Ahead

Observers have been predicting that, with the lease-lend bill out of the way, the next big question which the Administration will take up is the question of sending additional destroyers or other fighting ships to England.

The public approved the transfer of 50 destroyers to England last spring, and a new public opinion survey is now being conducted to measure sentiment on the question of transferring additional destroyers. Wendell Willkie has proposed that the Government turn over four or five a month to the British.

Another question which will undoubtedly come up is whether the United States should ship war materials to England in American boats if British shipping proves inadequate to the task. The last test of public sentiment on the issue showed the country about evenly divided, with a slight majority opposed to the sending of war materials abroad in American ships.

$1 a Day More Only Demand Of Miners for New Contract

By the Associated Press

New York, March 11.—The United Mine Workers of America (C. I. O.), opening negotiations for a new two-year contract covering 450,000 soft-coal miners, today surprised the Nation's major bituminous operators by demanding less than had been expected—$1-a-day increase in wages and no changes in hours.

This development indicated that management and labor would come to terms more quickly than two years ago, when a two-month deadlock resulted and a general mine shut-down developed during bitter negotiations.

Some industrialists had expected demands for a $3 increase and a five-hour reduction in the present 35-hour, five-day week—demands which they feared might again cause a deadlock.

Meeting jointly with the miners in biennial conference, operators of the eight-State Appalachian bituminous area termed the union's new objectives, however, a "rather formidable set of demands," and prepared to present counter proposals Thursday.

President John L. Lewis, of the U. M. W. A., warned the operators that he would insist upon the wage increase on the grounds that the demands were "not excessive" and that the operators, with production rapidly increasing, were able to pay.

House Kills Cox Defense Probe Proposal

By John B. Oakes

Post Staff Writer

A proposal of Representative Eugene Cox, anti-Administration Georgia Democrat, for a broad investigation into all Federal defense activities, was unexpectedly turned down in the House yesterday by a two to one vote.

His resolution was defeated after it had been subjected to a furious attack both on and off the floor by the Military Affairs Committee, which maintained that its prerogatives would be infringed by the projected special investigation. The Military Affairs group has been conducting its own inquiry into defense contracts for several weeks.

Another factor reportedly contributing to the down fall of the proposal was a fear of labor members of the House that the resolution was so broadly worded that it would permit the investigation to turn into a labor inquiry, headed by Cox, generally rated an arch-conservative.

It was also reported that labor lobbyists were at work in the Capitol buttonholing members to vote against the bill.

Cox sought, however, to assuage this fear by stating at the outset of yesterday's debate that he had "no intention to investigate labor or any other organized group."

After an hour's speechmaking, the House, in effect, killed the Cox resolution by voting to lay it on the table. The only roll call vote, which served as a gauge of House sentiment, showed 252 Representatives of both parties voting against Cox and 112 with him.

The Senate already has approved an inquiry into the defense program. Chairman of the investigating group, Senator Truman, generally considered an Administration supporter, said yesterday that his seven-man committee would meet today to consider plans.

Chairman May of the Military Affairs Committee opposed the Cox measure on grounds of prerogative and Representative Dirksen, Illinois Republican, warned that the Appropriations Committee also would suffer.

Vinson Favors Inquiry

Representative Thomason, of Texas, ranking Democrat on the Military Affairs Committee, suggested that Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, be supplied with roller skates and Brig. Gen. Brehon Somervell, chief of Army construction, be given a scooter so that they could dash more rapidly from one Congressional investigating committee to another.

Chairman Vinson of the Naval Affairs Committee, on the other hand, urged the House to indorse the inquiry, "to see how the people's money is being spent."

The special committee would serve "purely publicity purposes," charged Representative Plumley, of Vermont, a Republican member of the Appropriations Committee.

Just before the vote, Representative Cox took the floor to say that his resolution was "not intended to step on the toes of Mr. May;" but, he said, "there is no occasion for anyone being a prima donna in this House of democrats."

O'Mahoney Proposes National Charters for Big Business

Federal charters for Nationwide corporations and tax revision to encourage small business were recommended yesterday by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, chairman of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

In a "final statement" to the committee, which will soon issue its concluding report after a 33-month investigation, Senator O'Mahoney declared that "free private enterprise or Government planning" are the alternatives "squarely presented to the people of the United States."

And, with "a definite and unequivocal declaration of our faith in free enterprise," the Wyoming Democrat made four major recommendations which, he said, would tend to reestablish and encourage it. They are:

1, National charters for national corporations; 2, "thorough enforcement" of the antitrust laws; 3, tax revision to encourage "new business and small enterprise," and 4, a national conference of business, labor, agricultural and consumers' organizations to "concentrate public thought and action on the objectives on which there is general agreement," in the attack on restraints of trade.

"The inevitable and inescapable result of continued concentration in big business is the final triumph of big government and the destruction of what we call the private enterprise system," the Senator said.

A national charter system for all national corporations, he declared, "would make unnecessary the creation of new boards and commissions because it could be used to define so clearly the responsibilities and the duties of all national corporations that discretionary regulation would be unnecessary."

Maintenance of free enterprise, he added, demands that "small enterprise should be effectively protected against attack by what we call monopoly."

He suggested a national charter law that "would make corporate directors trustees in fact as well as in law and, at the same time, make them personally liable for violations of the antitrust law which they themselves conceived and directed.

To encourage small business and promote the employment of private capital, Senator O'Mahoney put forward two possible methods: Incentive taxation and establishment of a system of privately insured loans for new enterprise.

"Congress can well consider the advisability of material reductions in the rate of taxation on returns which come from investments in new, independent business of any kind," he suggested, adding that "these reductions should be made without much regard to the surtax structure."

The best source of Federal revenue, he said, "is not to be found in heavier taxes on those who have the large or even the excessive incomes, but, on the contrary, in increasing the incomes of those who are in the lower brackets."

Defense Bound to Increase Air Accidents, Army Warns

By John G. Norris

Post Staff Writer

The War Department warned the Nation yesterday that with the expansion of the Air Corps it must expect an increase not only in the number but in the rate of aircraft accidents.

In a formal statement discussing the considerable number of fatal plane crashes in recent weeks, the department predicted a continuing rise in the accident rate and attributed it to three main factors. They are:

Greater "physical and psychological strains" placed on pilots as a result of the "present pressure upon personnel of all ranks to prepare for the realities of modern air combat before it is too late."

Lowering of the average experience of pilots as a result of the great increase in the Air Corps.

The "more exacting and hazardous nature of military flying demanded by the increases in speed, performance and complexity of the modern military airplane."

More Men Involved

Because of the latter factor, the Army statement declared, plane crashes have become more "conspicuous." Because modern planes have larger crews, the average number of men killed in accidents has increased more than 30 per cent in the last ten years.

The recent plane crashes, the department said, are cause for "grave concern" but not "undue alarm."

Personnel errors account for 80 out of 100 plane mishaps of all types, it was disclosed, as against 14 per cent attributed to mechanical failures. Six per cent are due to miscellaneous or undetermined causes.

Experienced Men Safest

The Army's statistics reveal that the safest flier is the one who flies the most. The accident rate for pilots of more than 750 hours' experience is slightly less than half the rate for graduate pilots of less than 750 flying hours.

On the other hand, the lowest accident rate in the service is among students at Air Corps schools where flying is under closer supervision than elsewhere. The accident rate for student pilots is only three-quarters of the overall rate, while the fatal accident rate of the fledgling fliers is only half that of the Army at large.

Vice on Wheels Pointed Out As Army Peril

Mayor Florello H. LaGuardia of New York yesterday proposed that legislation to bar prostitution around Army posts be amended to include control over "motorized vice."

Establishment of "moral zones" around camps, within which houses of prostitution are prohibited, might not be effective, he told the House Military Committee, unless authority is granted to seize vehicles used to carry soldiers to houses outside the zone.

The seizure authority should also cover trailers used for immoral purposes just beyond the patrolled areas, LaGuardia said. Only by diligent watch and instant seizure of such vehicles can the problem be effectively handled, he stated.

The New York mayor, who appeared to indorse the bill on behalf of the United States Conference of Mayors, also aided the committee on a point that has caused trouble—the definition of a "reasonable distance" around posts within which Army and Navy authorities are empowered to stamp out vice.

He suggested that a "reasonable distance" would extend to any area within easy transportation distance of a camp.

Congress Leaders Get 6 Pens Used To Sign Aid Bill

By the Associated Press

Six pens were used by President Roosevelt to sign the lend-lease bill—one for every three letters in his signature.

The pens will be distributed to Congressional leaders who ushered the measure through the House and Senate. The bill has been known as H. R. 1776. Upon its enactment, the bill became "Public Law No. 11 of the Seventy-seventh Congress."

Franco Rejects Nazi Demand, Say Reports

By the Associated Press

New York, March 11.—Reliable informants said tonight that Gen. Franco had abruptly turned down a German demand for facilities to fly military planes across Spain to Africa.

These informants said that a well-planned "swift diplomatic maneuver" by Nazi Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop thus collapsed, and as a result, Gen. Espinosa de los Monteros, Spanish Ambassador to Berlin, lost his job.

This is the story:

Von Ribbentrop, it was said, summoned the Spanish Ambassador to the Berlin foreign office and read to him rapidly a document containing German proposals for "Spanish cooperation."

Suner Surprised

Most important of these was a demand for Spanish territorial facilities to fly military planes to Africa.

About the same time, tonight's informants continued, German Ambassador Baron Eberhard von Stohrer called upon the Spanish foreign minister, Ramon Serrano Suner, "to discuss details for carrying out the agreement" which, Von Stohrer claimed, already had been reached in Berlin.

Serrano Suner was taken by surprise. He declared he had no knowledge of the agreement and had not even heard of Von Ribbentrop seeing the Spanish Ambassador to Berlin on the subject.

Later, Franco granted an audience to Von Stohrer at his official residence, the Pardo Palace.

Stohrer, it was said, repeated the German proposals.

Franco, informed persons asserted, turned them down as "inconsistent with the honor of Spain."

Los Monteros, it appeared, had merely made noncommittal acknowledgment of Ribbentrop's proposals when he called at the Wilhelmstrasse and, before he had a chance to report to Madrid, Von Stohrer was carrying out his end of the German maneuver at the Spanish foreign office.

The Spanish Ambassador now will be replaced by former Minister to Switzerland Barcenas, it was understood.

The same sources which related this story said there had been increasing pressure on Spain recently for Axis "free passage" to Africa.

French Sign Treaty Ceding Large Slice Of Indo-China's Best Lands to Thailand

Japan, the Mediator, Likely to Get Crops Of Rice Involved

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, March 11.—French Indo-China handed one of her richest rice-producing areas over to Thailand today under a Japanese-mediated settlement ending a border dispute which flared into undeclared war last fall.

Japan, short on rice, was believed in diplomatic circles to have obtained assurances that she could purchase the entire rice output of the ceded territory.

Thailand was understood to have acquired 21,750 square miles of territory in Cambodia and Laos, areas she lost to Indo-China in 1904 and 1907. Thus she realized some, but not all, of her demands which led to four months of border fighting. Japan stepped in and effected an armistice January 31.

Included in the ceded territory was the district around the town of Pak-Lay, representing an incomplete triangle between the Mekong River and the current border. This region consists primarily of forest lands, the output of which also may go to Japan.

Thailand's choicest acquisition was a slice of northern and northwestern Cambodia, where rice is the principal crop. In all, the French ceded about one-fourth of Cambodia. They retain, however, a small area across the Mekong from the town of Stung-Treng.

(The exact demarkation line was not disclosed, but it was indicated the new boundary would run from the present frontier northeast to the northern tip of Tonle-Sap—Grand Lake—thence north for a short distance, then east to the Mekong River in the vicinity of Stung-Treng. This would give Thailand the town of Battambang but by special agreement Indo-China retains the famed Angkor ruins of a civilization more than 2,000 years old.)

Signing ceremonies were held at the official residence of Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye, concluding Japan's initial effort as a mediator in her proclaimed role of leader in greater East Asia.

After the delegates signed the numerous documents—all used pens except Japanese Foreign Minister Matsuoka, who used a brush—the foreign minister proclaimed:

"By this signature, friendly relations between France and Thailand have been restored, and a bond of coexistence and coprosperity between Japan on one side and those two nations on the other has been further cemented, thereby contributing in some measure toward establishment of peace in greater East Asia and the world."

RESULTS OF FRONTIER DISPUTE—Diagonally-shaded areas indicate territory ceded to Thailand by French-Indo China in their frontier dispute. The Mekong River limits much of the new boundary. Debt Limit to Be Boosted Next Year

No raise this year in the $65,000,000,000 debt limit will be needed to carry President Roosevelt's $7,000,000,000 aid fund request, but an upward revision of the legal limit will probably be required next year.

Administration officials are confident that the new money can not be spent fast enough to eat up the remainder of the legal debt limit before a new session of Congress.

Current outstanding debt plus expenditures planned for this year and the next fiscal year will bring the Government's outstanding obligations to the $65,000,000,000 ceiling by the fiscal year 1942, officials estimate.

To help pay for the record program, Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau, jr., will ask Congress for new taxes calculated to bring in revenue of $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000.

Assassin's Bomb Misses British Envoy were found to contain wrapped parcels, and that they were sent on from the train to the hotel apart from the other luggage.

He did not go into detail but the implication was that the packages gave rise to some mistrust.

This, it was disclosed, was the second attempt upon Rendel's life since he broke Britain's relations with German-occupied Bulgaria last week.

An effort was made last night to blow up the special train on which the diplomat and 67 other Britons—among them women, children and infants—traveled here from Sofia, a British source said.

The circumstances surrounding the assertion of such an attempt were not clear, but it appeared to be based upon the incident of the two suitcases—of which, it was said, Rendel himself had not known until after his arrival here.

The police said that, granting the assumption that the bags had contained the explosive that smashed the Pera Palace lobby, the intention presumably was to allow them to explode on the train en route here.

The man who found the bags told the authorities that only one was taken to the Pera Palace and the other to another hotel here, where he himself planned to stay. This second bag was taken to a deserted area and left under guard.

Ickes Declares His Coal Division Vital to Defense

Continued operation of the Interior Department's bituminous coal division, charged with regulating minimum prices for soft coal, was described by Secretary Ickes yesterday a vital to national defene.

He said chaos would result in the industry if the floor under market prices were removed, and added:

"If production were disrupted for even a few weeks, some factories would have to close their doors and the continuous operation of railroad and public utilities would be imperiled.

"The resultant situation would be much more prejudicial to our national defense program than strikes or lockouts in hundreds of individual factories."

The authorizing law expires next month.

British Reported Landing Big Army in Greece

had assembled at least ten divisions—approximately 175,000 troops—in Africa for transportation to Greece, but it was not revealed how many of these, if any, had been actually disembarked.

If a British expeditionary force has landed in Greece, for action either on the Albanian front or to be brought face to face with the German Balkan army along the Bulgarian-Greek border, it is presumed to be a result of the recent Athens consultations of British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Gen. Sir John G. Dill, chief of the British imperial general staff.

Eden, before his departure from Athens by plane a week ago, announced that Britain and Greece would fight side by side to "a final victory" and a communique was issued at the same time saying that the Anglo-Greek allies had reached "full agrement" aimed at preventing the spread of the war in the Balkans.

This was taken to mean that the Greeks and British had formulated a plan for coping with the new German menace, following the Nazi military occupation of Bulgaria, although it had been intimated previously that the Greeks were reluctant to agree to the landing of any British forces in Greece for fear of incurring a German attack.

May Sway Belgrade

If British troops actually have appeared in Greece in large numbers the situation may have repercussions on Yugoslavia's shift toward "closer collaboration" with Germany which would complete Adolf Hitler's encirclement of Greece. This encirclement, it is now taken for granted, is aimed at forcing the Greeks to submit to peace with Italy.

It is believed in Belgrade that Premier Dragisha Cvetkovitch and Foreign Minister Alexander Cincar-Markovitch will go to Germany Saturday, having postponed the trip so they might study the statement on Turkish policy which Premier Dr. Refik Saydam is expected to make before the Turkish Parliament today or Thursday.

Informed quarters here meanwhile reported that the government of Nazi-occupied Bulgaria will be reconstructed shortly along Nazi lines, bringing into the cabinet former Premier Alexander Tsankoff, well-known pro-Nazi and champion of all possible collaboration with Germany.

The International News Service reported more Yugoslavian troops were en route to the Bulgarian frontier and army leaders were said to be determined that Yugoslavia will not follow Rumania and Bulgaria in losing her national integrity.

However, the news agency Avala denied that Germany has delivered any ultimatum to Yugoslavia. The report arose after German Minister Von Heeren called on Foreign Minister Alexander Cincar-Markovitch Tuesday.

Turks Fire on Nazi Planes

In Ankara, a Russian promise that Turkey need fear no attack from the Soviet should she enter the war has been given to the Turkish Ambassador to Moscow by V. Molotoff, the Russian premier and foreign commissar, a competent source told the Associated Press.

The same informant added that the Germans were raising long-range guns in the port of Varna in Nazi-occupied Bulgaria, with the apparent intention of controlling Black Sea shipping.

Almost simultaneously with these reports came a disclosure by a foreign diplomatic source that three German warplanes flying over Turkish fortifications along the Bulgarian frontier were fired upon yesterday by Turkish antiaircraft guns. The Nazis, unhit, were said to have sped back over the territory of Bulgaria.

Near the Turkish frontier alone, the Germans stood an estimated 125,000 strong last night.

Mass Raiders Batter British Cities Again

By the Associated Press

London (Wednesday), March 12. German warplanes bombed at least 150 persons out of their homes in one area of a northwestern town and buried many others beneath wreckage in another during a raid of several hours last night.

It was the heaviest sustained attack on the town in several months.

Many of those dug from the debris of demolished homes as the raid ended shortly before midnight were reported in grave condition.

Raiders also concentrated on the West Midlands where hundreds of incendiaries were scattered but fires were declared held to a minimum.

Fatalities, however, were reported from one town where it was said six persons died on one street of a blasted residential section.

Planes returning from the midlands were engaged by London's antiaircraft guns.

Several districts of the capital were hit, and, earlier in the evening, British fighters engaged one formation of Germans in a short, fierce battle over a town on the Thames estuary.

The Luftwaffe also made its assaults felt at Liverpool and off the coasts of northeast Scotland, south Wales and western England.

The attacks were a continuation of stepped-up give-and-take air warfare. Only Monday night, Cologne, Germany's third largest city, was subjected to an R. A. F. assault declared to have started large fires in its industrial center and on the approaches of the Hohenzollern Bridge spanning the Rhine.

The Germans matched this blow with a six-hour fire and explosive bomb raid on Portsmouth, the mightiest assault yet loosed against that naval station on Britain's south coast.

Many persons were killed in Portsmouth and the surrounding area and fires raged long after the Germans had ended the attack.

Aerial activity tapered off yesterday with sporadic Nazi raids, chiefly against Kent. One Nazi plane was downed in the afternoon off the south coast, the government announced.

The British said that seven German night raiders were knocked down Monday night—four of them by Portsmouth's antiaircraft batteries—and acknowledged the loss of three R. A. F. planes.

Besides Cologne, the air ministry said, docks at Boulogne, Cherbourg and Brest along the Nazi-held "invasion coast" were bombed, while other R. A. F. units carried out offensive patrols over airdromes in northern France. One Nazi plane was declared to have been shot down over its own base.

Several explosions were said to have followed bomb bursts in Cologne's industrial center. The Hohenzollern Bridge, which apparently drew major attention from the British raiders, is an important Rhine crossing for both automobiles and trains.

At Portsmouth, more than 30 fires blazed at one time.

One of the city's oldest shopping centers was severely damaged and several buildings were destroyed. Two postoffices were damaged.

The air ministry news service said one of the German planes destroyed at Portmouth was seen to explode in midair. Two others were sent plunging into the sea and the fourth crashed into mud on the Isle of Wight.

Other widely separated areas of England were raided and London had four alerts, but the government said they caused little damage and "very few casualties."

American Becomes 'Prettiest Woman in House of Commons'

Wife Succeeds British Flier Killed in Action

By Eddy Gilmore

Associated Press Staff Writer

MRS. BEATRICE RATHBONE

London, March 11.—Pretty, sparkling-eyed Mrs. Beatrice Clough Rathbone became the second American-born woman member of the House of Commons today by virtue of her unopposed nomination in Bodmin District.

She takes the seat of her husband, Flight Lieut. John Rankin Rathbone who was killed last December on his first flight over Germany.

Born in Boston 30 years ago, Mrs. Rathbone will serve in Commons as a Conservative member, like her husband. Under a political truce, no Labor candidate was nominated to oppose her for the seat.

She became the fourteenth woman member of Commons. The other American-born woman members is Lady Astor.

Mrs. Hathbone, mother of two children now in the United States, always has been keenly interested in politics and made many speeches for her husband.

"I believe I know 6,000 persons in our district," she said. "It's a big district, and soon I hope to know everyone by personal visit."

Mrs. Rathbone will take her seat as soon as parliamentary machinery allows—probably in two or three weeks.

It is hard to tell she is American, because of her English accent, but now and then some American words slip through.

She is a neat dresser—certainly a decorative asset to commons—and easily the prettiest woman there. One old member declared her the "best looker" ever elected.

She is a busy war worker, did much last summer in sending children off to safety in America. She misses her own little daughter and son, now in New York.

"I know I'm foolish," she said, "and they are best off in America.

"It is very hard not being with them when they are growing up, yet I feel I should carry on John's work."

British Baronet Held in Killing Of Peer on Tropical Party

By the Associated Press

Nairobi, Kenya, March 11.—The crown today formaly charged a distinguished baronet, Maj. Sir Henry John Delves Broughton, 57, with the tropical night murder of the Earl of Erroll, hereditary high constable of Scotland.

No evidence bearing on motive was offered at the brief court session at which Maj. Broughton was charged. It was adjourned until March 19, when testimony is expected to be offered about a dinner party on the night of January 23, which both men attended.

Some hours later the body of the 39-year-old earl was found on a moonlit road, slumped on the floorboards of his automobile. At first the death was believed to have been accidental, but a pathologist's disclosed he had been shot behind the ear.

Maj. Broughton and his first wife, a big-game huntress, were divorced last year. Last month he was married to Miss Diana Caldwell.

The dinner which preceded the shooting was at the Muthaiga Club in Parklands, a residential suburb of this haven for retired British army officers. Present were Lord Erroll, Maj. Broughton, his present wife and a Mrs. Carberry.

There were the customary wines—friends said neither the earl nor the baronet was a teetotaler.

Both Lord Erroll and Maj. Broughton were good looking, with money and lands.

Erroll's title of Lord High Constable of Scotland enabled him to rank above all the peerage of the land save royalty. It was conferred on the family by Robert the Bruce, in 1309, and descends now to his 15-year-old daughter, Lady Diana Denyse Hay, now Countess of Erroll.

Maj. Broughton, the eleventh baronet, is a former major in the Irish Guards. A 25-year-old son is serving in the British army.

standing with Japan.")

Words Left Unfinished

"The wish underlying the pact is prevention," one said. "But, of course, if others won't let themselves be prevented——"

The sentence was left unfinished.

A spokesman at the daily foreign press conference made two observations on the British aid bill. They were:

1. That Felix Frankfurter, a Vienna-born Jew, helped President Roosevelt draft the bill and "this indicates that the bill is offensive rather than defensive because the Jews hope to regain the position in Europe which they have fortunately lost.

2. William C. Bullitt, former United States Ambassador to France, is primarily to blame if it is true, as he asserts, that greater danger faces the United States now than ever in her history.

To Leave Tokyo Today

Matsuoka is expected to leave Tokyo tomorrow, traveling via Moscow, and an offical German statement said his stay in Berlin "is intended for a personal discussion of all questions arising from cooperation, as called for in the three powers pact between Germany, Italy and Japan."

He will go from here to Rome.

Semiofficial commentators said the underlying principles of his visit were law and order, security against aggression, prevention of widening the combat area and determinatoin no to meddle in the "living space" of other powers or to permit others to meddle in the "living space" of Japan, Italy and Germany.

The well-informed commentary service, Dienst Aus Deutschland, added:

"By coordination of the energies of the three-power pact, the young nations will be able to keep the initiative for action against the common enemy—England—in their own hands."

ties to remain at their posts to aid in defense of Thrace.

The war "for the defense of Greece" will continue without pause and without regard to any threats just as it did under the late Premier Gen. John Metaxas, Koczias said.

(The German army is reported to have between 150,000 and 200,000 troops, including tanks and armored units, at the Bulgarian frontier facing Greece, barely 60 miles north of Salonika.)

During Tuesday's fighting on the Albanian front, a communique said, Italian planes bombed Linhouri on the island of Cephalonia and a town on the west coast of the Peloponnesus without damage.

The government said the Italians had failed to gain "an inch of ground" anywhere and that" the mountain ravines were covered with hundreds of Italian dead and wounded."

The spokesman quoted Italian prisoners as saying that crack Fascist Blackshirt units "followed up the attacking Italian units with machine guns to force them to fight."

The prisoners were quoted as saying also that 130,000 Italian troops have been knocked out of action since the start of the war.

The spokesman said that the Italians abandoned "an abundance of war materials on the battleground."

The Greek offensive, said to extend along the entire Albanian front from the Adriatic coast to Lake Ochrida at the Yugoslav frontier, started at dawn Friday.

In the coastal sector on the Adriatic south of Valona, he said, the Italians attempted three futile counterattacks, the first of which was "wiped out by accurate Greek artillery fire."

The second one was hurled against mile-high Greek positions but was "just as easily repulsed with still heavier losses for the Italians," it was stated.

At dusk the Italians northeast of the coastal front attempted to regain lost ground, striking with important forces supported by violent artillery fire," the announcement said.

"This attacn developed over a large area where it appeared that the Italians were determined to regain their positions but there too they had to withdraw because of heavy losses."

At one point, it was said, the Italians were mistakenly machine-gunned by their own planes.

Ethiopians Wrest Town From Italians

By the Associated Press

Cairo, March 11.—Native patriots heading one of seven British imperial columns boring into Ethiopia have captured Dambacha, 180 miles northwest of Addis Ababa, and are driving on toward the capital, Middle East headquarters announced today.

Coupled with this advance, today's war bulletin said British forces which have moved into eastern Ethiopia from Italian Somaliland captured a brigade commander, a resident commissioner and their staffs and "many hundreds of additional prisoners." This column is pushing toward Harar.

The native captors of Dambacha, in Gojjam Province, were declared to be close on the heels of Italians retreating toward Debramarkos, 30 miles to the southeast.

Advance on Asosa

Between the latter town and Addis Ababa lies rough country and it was problematical whether the forces of Emperor Haile Selassie, aided by a few British officers and advisers, would attempt to be the first to get to the capital.

Other forces operating along the border between Ethiopia and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan south of Kurmuk, where the British entered Ethiopia, were reported to have occupied Afodu Escarpment and now are advancing toward Asosa.

Italians who had held out stubbornly at Afodu, abandoned their guns and other equipment and fled, the British communique said.

R. A. F. fliers aided the latter operation with an attack upon grounded Italian planes at Asosa. The R. A. F. also bombed besieged Cheren, in Eritrea.

In Eritrea, the Fascist air force was declared to have been virtually knocked out.

Tripoli Bombed

Not forgetting the Libyan front, the R. A. F. announced heavy overnight raids on Tripoli and on airdromes in Tripolitania. It said harbor works and shipping were attacked, with fire and explosions resulting, and at least two enemy planes destroyed.

British authorities here say the Italian force at Cheren now numbers 40,000, including 15,000 white troops.

The clean-up of Italian Somaliland, north of the captured capital city of Mogadiscio, is continuing. As far as it is known here, only two Italian garrisons remain in Somaliland, one at Hafun on the Indian Ocean and the other inland from there.

Franco Rejects Nazi Demands, Reports Assert

By Lloyd Lehrbas

Associated Press Staff Writer

The United States has intervened with the Spanish and Vichy governments, it was learned authoritatively yesterday, on behalf of thousands of Spanish Republicans who are prisoners in Spain or political refugees in unoccupied France.

Appeals from Secretary of State Hull to Gen. Franco, it was learned, sought clemency for the political prisoners on "humanitarian" grounds after receipt of reports of wholesale executions and crowded prisons in the wake of Spain's civil war.

The friendly request to Franco was disclosed by individual letters from the State Department to a number of American citizens interested in the fate of Spaniard's who fought vainly to save the Spanish Republic.

The State Department's letters to inquiring Americans pointed out that since the political prisoner cases involved the treatment by Spain of Spanish nations the United States could not claim to have a direct interest nor present any legal justification for action by the American government.

"Acting upon the broader grounds of humanity," however, the letters explained, "we have approached the Spanish government with our views on this matter and have expressed the hope that clemency may be exercised in political cases."

New Helen Hayes Play Seems in the Making

'Crusader in Crinoline" Is Currently "Hot;" Is Bob Wilson's Life of Harriet Beecher Stowe; Testimonial Planned to an Admirable Fellow

WE WOULD BE WILLING TO WAGER, at the moment, that Helen Hayes' next stellar appearance on the stage will be in the title role of a dramatization, not yet made, of "Crusader in Crinoline," into the bookstalls off the Lippincott presses no longer ago than March 5.

BELL

"Crusader in Crinoline" is the biography of Harriet Beecher Stowe, ably written by Robert Forrest Wilson, former Washington newspaperman, co-author of the stage play, "Blessed Event" and indefatigable contributor to the foremost of the national magazines. Bob did a noble job of research in compiling the source material for his book, already sold out in its first edition and the subject of unanimously favorable reviews by all of the bulging-browed critics who have read it. He spent something more than two years in running down the authentic history of one of the most distinguished and itinerant American families of its era. The results are attested in the encomiums heaped upon his valid volume.

Charles MacArthur, her husband in private life, long has had the notion, it seems, that Harriet Beecher Stowe would be an ideal character for Miss Hayes to portray upon the boards. She expressed a similar enthusiasm yesterday in a noonday, round-table interval of this-and-that with the drama desks. The Wilson book now seems to solve the matter that has been rumbling around in the back of the MacArthur mind these past few years. No less eminent a playwright than Robert E. Sherwood sees in it the basis of a splendid play. Gilbert Miller, having read the work in galley proof, is keen upon producing it. With Mr. Wilson, Mr. Miller comes first. Other interests, intent on securing the stage rights, will not have a look-in until he has said "No." And, as nearly as I can gather, Mr. Miller has no intention of pronouncing any such negative ultimatum.

Of all this, Miss Hayes entertained a less concrete opinion than we, thanks to kind informants and long friendship with Bob Wilson, were able to extend her. We are all agreed that Washington's first actress, by every physical, mental and spiritual endowment is the ideal embodiment of the personality that was at least partially responsible for precipitating what Mr. Lincoln, on occasion, referred to as the "Stowe War." What will come out of it all remains to be seen. But the thing definitely is on the way. It may be a year or two—but eventually.

In the meantime, Miss Hayes, in a manner of speaking, is hoist by her own petard. In particularly gracious and intimate mood yesterday—as if she were not always—she confided that she had embarked upon this "Twelfth Night" excursion into Shakespeare because she, frankly, was in quest of a short engagement that would not tie her up for years on end to the portrayal of a single character, as was the case with "Mary of Scotland," "Victoria Regina" and practically everything else she has done of late, with the possible exception of "Ladies and Gentlemen"—"I have my family, home and domestic responsibilities now, and after all they are entitled to some attention." And so what happens? What happens is that "Twelfth Night" sets itself down as a record-breaking hit, with the incomparable Maurice Evans' Malvolio teamed with Miss Hayes' Viola; will have done 33 weeks of capacity business this season and is tentatively on the Theater Guild-Gilbert Miller books for a 30-week tour to the Coast next season—with another possible Washington week nebulously included. And what Helen was after was a short engagement!

Incidentally, Mrs. MacArthur is less at home in her home town than almost anybody else you could mention. Yesterday morning, for example, during her habitual constitutional, she ran afoul of the traffic lights and was peremptorily warned of the penalties of jaywalking. "Sorry," she said, "I'm from New York." Then, all of a sudden, she remembered that she isn't. And was her face red! And that perfectly true yarn of ours about Maurice Evans' diminutive canine bodyguard, Tuppence, giving us the growl in his master's dressing room one night has given her a stark and sinister idea, too. She now plans to train a Great Dane to growl at critics! Nice girl.

There was to have been something here and now about the testimonial dinner to be given our old friend, Rudolph Berger, division manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures in this territory, in recognition of 30 years of valiant service on the side of the cinema's better interests in and about Washington, but time and space seem somehow to have slipped away in the direction of Helen Hayes. The Variety Club banquet, nevertheless, will be held in the Willard Hotel on Monday night, April 7, at the same hour by the wristwatch. More of this later. But, for a present afterthought, tickets already are on sale. The Willard ought not to be able to hold the crowd eager to do honor to a grand guy.

Leonard Lyons:

New York, March 11.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE: The President soon will announce the creation of a Financial and Economic Planning Board, for the national defense program . . . London Daily Mail: Good luck. And I hope your readers will find some pleasure in reading this column . . . Cordell Hull: The Nippon Club on West 93rd, where all the Japanese officials congregate, had its bar closed by the ABC Board on "Empire Day," at which they were to celebrate the birth of the Japanese Empire. The difficulties were settled by the employment of an American bartender—and so the bar has been reopened . . . Lord Halifax: Frederick Lonsdale, the British playwright, and Andre Maurois, the French writer, appeared on the "Bungles for Britain" broadcast, after they were needled by Henry Bernstein.

LYONS

W. C. FIELDS: Gene Fowler is on his way to Hollywood to rejoin you. He said he had a terrible time in New York—that he was sick 18 days and was tight only 2 days, instead of vice versa . . . Jimmy Roosevelt: Your brother, Elliott, is in town. He's working so hard at his air corps job that, for the first time since he quit school, he's under 200 pounds . . . George Washington Hill: At the Lucky Strike Hit Parade broadcast Saturday night, the $500 prize money was guarded by four armed guards. They were there to protect only the $500 cash. Unguarded were the three Stradivarious violins used by members of Mark Warnow's orchestra. One of the violins, owned by Arnold Eidus, is valued at $25,000.

DEAN ALFANGE: President Roosevelt, who indorsed you last week in the campaign for Kenneth Simpson's Congressional seat, is a paid-up member of AHEPA, the organization of Americans of Greek origin . . . Nelson Rockefeller: Don Francisco will report to you about his trip to South America . . . Dan Parker: Saturday night, at the Hotel Roosevelt, the District Reporters Association held their annual frolic. Your poem, "The District Man," was read to the guests—the poem in which you describe how the District reporters get quickly to the scene of action, discovering fires before the firemen do, etc. Jacques Cappella, of the dance team of Cappella and Beatrice, discovered a blaze in the foyer of the ballroom, notified the manager, and the fire was put out. Only then were the scooped District reporters told of the blaze.

ED FLYNN: Louis Bromfield's farm in Mansfield, Ohio, has unusual decorations. Each building has a board showing its name corresponding to the name of one of his successful novels, which helped pay for the farm. Bromfield, a New Dealer, has a fireplace over which is painted an American eagle and stars representing the States. "But you haven't 48 stars," Bromfield was told. "I know," replied the novelist. "I don't count the States which went Republican." . . . N. B. C.: The Federal Communications Commission's report on radio monopoly will be released soon. It will precipitate a fight between all the radio chains and the FCC, which will attack the radio contracts, etc. . . . Darryl Zanuck: Milton Berle, who left for Hollywood to appear in "Sun Valley," is separated from his mother for the first time in his life. She remained here to prepare for her new grandchild.

J. EDGAR HOOVER: Some planes being flown from the Coast and destined for England are being shot at by rifle marksmen in the Jersey hills, 15 minutes' flying time from Newark Airport . . . Adolf Berle: Here's a gesture made by Wakatsuqi, Japan's Ambassador without portfolio here. When he arrived two weeks ago he brought a memorial plaque, in honor of the late Frank Hedges, the Tokio correspondent who died there last April. The plaque will be presented to Hedges' old school, the School of Journalism at Columbia, Mo. . . . Lana Turner: Harry Rapf, the M-G-M producer, had no faith in your screen possibilities until the polls convinced him of his error. "Lana Turner, Hmpf," he had told his associates. "Take off her sweater, and what've you got."

Starlet's Fright Due to Cue Word

In a location scene for "Billy the Kid," Robert Taylor's new film for M-G-M, Mary Howard had to drive a team of horses. Mary was carefully instructed in the difficult art by one of the Arizona wranglers. She drove for a couple of hours before she tried it before the camera and it was a cinch. The horses were very gentle.

Then everything was ready and the director called, "Turn 'em over" and "Action." At these words the horses tore down the road at a gallop, with Mary hanging on the reins for dear life and yelling her head off.

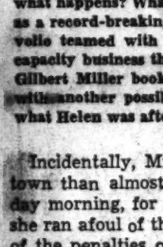
In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, March 11.

When Wally Beery was back East not long ago, he asked his former wife, Gloria Swanson, to marry him. The answer was no. Then he made her a financial settlement of $100 a week, and on his return arranged with his studio to have her play the leading role in one of his pictures at a price of $25,000. Again Gloria refused. She must be waiting for the millennium.



HOPPER

Dorothy Parker, of the sad, wistful face and wit like a mental cocktail, is working on Ginger Rogers' next, which I believe will be called "Weekend for Three." But it may be just "Weak End" . . . Lynn Fontanne spent a whole day recording "Cliffs of Dover," which you'll now be able to buy on records.

Charlie McCarthy, Edgar Bergen's mouthpiece, is often confused with Charles MacArthur, Helen Hayes' husband. When Marta Eggerth was invited to appear on the Bergen show, she was told the real star was Charlie McCarthy, a dummy. "But," queried Marta doubtfully, "how in the world could a bright girl like Helen Hayes be married to a dummy?"

Barton MacLane played the heavy in "Western Union" so well that he was booed by a small boy coming out of the Chinese Theater. Bart made himself popular with the fan by blowing the kid to a soda. Now they're buddies . . . Incidentally, Bart is one of Hollywood's best bathroom barytones. Time was, 10 years ago, when he played the guitar and sang off-screen dubbing in a singing sequence for Tom Brown in "A Lady Lies."

Funnyman Walter Catlett, after years in musical comedy, is appearing now in "Unfinished Business." The character he's playing is a broad burlesque of a famous (shhhh!) Jumbo—Billy R——e!

Carmita set a record, and what a rumpus when she led a Conga line of 3,300 persons at our Palladium which holds 6,500 . . . Paramount believes they've found the perfect starring material for June Preisser—the Maude stories, written by Graeme and Sarah Lorimer, which appeared in the Ladies Home Journal for years.

Gale Sondergaard, who HATES cats, did "The Cat and the Canary," is now working in "The Black Cat," and eight fans gifted her with felines . . . Alfred Vanderbilt is our greatest doggie giver. When he squired Margaret Lindsay, she got a Cocker spaniel. Virginia Field is now airing a toy French poodle.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, March 11 (INS).—Paulette Goddard and Charlie Chaplin came out to Marsons farm for luncheon Sunday, bringing Charles Jr., who is taller than his father and such an intelligent lad. Charlie leaves next week for New York and he tells me his next story is going to be laid in the big town which he has found so changed, he says, he hardly knew it. "I am going to play a drunk," Charlie told me, "who sees the world changing before his eyes—a lonely person, who, in his travels, comes across a little chorus girl. Of course, she doesn't know he exists. Paulette will play that chorus girl and I am writing the story more for her than for myself. I have already written 40 pages," he said proudly.

PARSONS

C. B Demille took a look at John Wayne in "Shepherd of the Hills" and said, "He's the one for Capt. John Martin in 'Reap the Wild Wind.'" That's a break, too, for John, for C. B. makes box-office pictures and his last one, "North West Mounted Police," played to standing room only even during the election days.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Mary Beth Heath is wearing a bracelet put on her arm by Harry Ritz inscribed, "to my future wife;" Ann Rutherford and George Montgomery becoming serious; Margaret Lindsay's new heart is a lieutenant stationed in San Diego; Yola d'Avril confided to friends at the Charles Foy Supper Club she is divorcing Eddie Ward, musical director of "Cheers for Miss Bishop;" Buster Collier has the measles and are his pals kidding him?

Lillian Roth, stepping out with Howard Burke at Victors in Beverly Hills, refused to comment on her divorce from the gentleman who socked and then married her; Eddie Cantor, who started Deanna Durbin on his radio show, lunching with her at the "U" Commissary and telling the world how proud he is of his protege; John Shelton has eyes only for cute little Ann Baxter.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

BERNHEIMER'S THEATERS

'Little Foxes' Opens Return Week Monday

"THE LITTLE FOXES." Tallulah Bankhead returns to the National Theater Monday evening for a week's engagement as the grasping Regina Giddens of Lillian Hellman's startling drama. This will be Miss Bankhead's second appearance here in the role, having played it on E Street over a year ago prior to a Nation-wide tour. "The Little Foxes" concerns an ambitious family of the South at the turn of the century and their efforts to found an industrial empire. With one exception, the cast is the same as the one which appeared during the New York and transcontinental runs, with Frank Conroy, Charles Dingle, Carl Benton Reid, Eugenia Rawls, Dan Duryea, Lee Baker, Abbie Mitchell and John Marriott. Marie Carroll replaces Patricia Collins as Birdie. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Capitol

"RAGE IN HEAVEN." Robert Montgomery plays a jealous, weakling husband in this screen adaptation of James Hilton's novel. His role is a successful young man whose growing madness fixes upon his wife and best friend, viewing them as victims for his perfect crime. Ingrid Bergman is his co-star and Lucile Watson, Oscar Homolka and Philip Merivale are featured. Al Trahan tops the stage bill, appearing with Geri Dorsey; Al Bernie, the mimic; Ray MacDonald and the Rhythm Rockets in "March Hares." Opens tomorrow morning.

Earle

"HONEYMOON FOR THREE." George Brent and Ann Sheridan play an author and his secretary whose lives are one squabble after another because of his lack of female resistance. An old college sweetheart mixes into the plot, Charlie Ruggles, Osa Massen, Jane Wyman, William Orr, Lee Patrick and Walter Catlett are featured. On the stage, the New York World's Fair musical, "Streets of Paris," will be presented in abbreviated form, with members of the original company in the cast.

Palace

"THE GREAT DICTATOR." Charlie Chaplin's satire on the two dictators, Hynkel of Tomania and Napolini of Bacteria, returns to F Street at popular prices. The great comic has written himself a dual role, that of a dictator of maniacal tendencies and a Jewish barber who is the spit image of the hated ruler. Jack Oakie, Paulette Goddard, Reginald Gardiner, Henry Daniell, Billy Gilbert, Maurice Moscovitch and Emma Dunn have the other leads. Opens tomorrow morning.

RKO-Keith's

"MR. AND MRS. SMITH." Carole Lombard and Robert Montgomery are the title players in this first romantic comedy to be directed by Alfred Hitchcock, continuing for a third week at the Fifteenth Street theater. Gene Raymond is the other pivotal figure in this tale of a mixed-up marriage.

Metropolitan

Columbia

With James Stewart in the role which won him the Academy Award for the finest male acting of the year, this notable screen version of the Philip Barry play continues for another week on F Street, with Katharine Hepburn, Cary Grant, Virginia Weidler, Ruth Hussey, John Howard and Roland Young.

Little

"NIGHT TRAIN." The English espionage film of the early days of the current war continues into a fifth week. Rex Harrison, Margaret Lockwood, Paul von Hernreid and the cricket players of "The Lady Vanishes" are the central performers.

Trans Lux

"THE SEVENTH WONDER." The Panama Canal, from its seventeenth century ruins to its amazing electric mules, is explored by the camera in the newsreel center's featured short subject of the new week. "The Milky Way," which won the Academy Adward as the year's finest cartoon, is also on the bill, which further includes a "Screen Snapshots" with Bobe Hope's radio associates and "Feathers," filmed in Santa Catalina's Bird Paradise. Opens Friday morning.

Gayety

"Ann CORIO'S GIRLS IN BLUE." Miss Corio heads her own revue for the incoming week at the burlesque theater opening Sunday afternoon. The titian-tressed enchantress will be supported by two comedians widely known on the circuit, Billy Foster and George Lewis.

Celebrities Found Costly To Schenck

By Inez Robb.
International News Service Staff Writer

New York, March 11.—With the notable exception of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, most of the celebrities on whom Joseph M. Schenck, movie magnate, tried his gambler's luck have cost him money.

Boy seldom gets girl was the recurrent theme of the real life scenario unfolded today in Federal court where Schenck, on trial for alleged income-tax evasions to the sum of $412,000, was portrayed as eternally wooing Lady Luck.

His suit was not often successful, it developed, except when he picked the President to win. Schenck's faith in Mr. Roosevelt won the movie tycoon $40,000 in election bets in November, 1936.

But his faith in his own prowess at poker cost him $30,905 on a single sunny day, that of September 30, 1937.

Checks Drawn

On that day, seven checks totaling this amount, were drawn payable to cash, it developed in the testimony of John B. Codd, auditor of the West Coast studios of Twentieth Century-Fox, of which Schenck is board chairman.

Those checks, Schenck told reporters, were to pay poker debts. Pencilled notations on one of the vouchers admitted as evidence showed that such Hollywood celebrities as Constance Bennett, Darryl Zanuck, Charles Boyer, J. Paley, uncle of William S. Paley, head of C. B. S.; Bob Riskin, author, and Sol Wurtzel, producer, had assisted Schenck to the "cleaners."

Zanuck assisted Schenck in the sum of $8,050. Wurtzel won the next largest pot, or $7,200.

Boyer, who had not been long in America at that time, but who apparently catches on quickly, cleaned up to the extent of $6,435, which is good for a beginner. Paley won $4,550.

At this poinnt, little Miss Bennett proved that women do so know the difference between three of a kind and the back end of a hack, for Connie of the Bennett clan rolled up a total of $3,925 on that sunny day in September. Riskin won a mere $775.

Schenck yawned delicately as his attorney, Harold ". Corbin, drew from Codd a tale of gambling losses in box-car figures.

Judge Grover M. Moscowitz listened with rapt attention as Codd explained that at the end of 1937 an item of $97,00 in the year's financial survey was outgo for gambling.

"Does that represent gambling losses?" the judge asked. The witness said it did.

Codd said that no record was kept of the take or winnings, but he added that an analysis of Schenck's financial status at the end of 1937 showed that $63,894.15 represented "the net amount of gambling losses." The years 1935, '36 and '37 are the ones in which the Government accuses Schenck and his Eastern representative, Joseph H. Moskowitz, of cheating the income tax collector.

The day's first witness inadvertently testified that even during his trial, cards have a compelling fascination for Schenck. That witness, Chico Marx, the piano-playing fraction of the Marx brothers, revealed that he had spent last night playing gin rummy with Schenck at his hotel.

Also Bewildered

Chico was recalled to the stand today after having turned in a sober performance on the witness stand yesterday. Chico was willing to play it straight today, too, but the law rose up to confuse him. Despite previous testimony from the assorted Marx brothers that they had never talked business at any time with Schenck, who was often their host, Chico today said Schenck had offered the Marxes a contract at one time.

With the prosecution snapping at him over this admission, Chico spent a bewildered moment on the stand before he stepped down.

Mathias F. Correa, chief assistant United States attorney, produced a transcript of a statement made under oath by Chico some weeks ago.

"Were you asked 'Have you ever had any contract talks with Mr. Schenck?' and didn't you answer 'No'?" Correa asked the muddled Marx.

"Well, I may have said that," Chico owned up, 'but I'm a little bit confused by the questions now."

Election Bets

Katherine Sullivan, pretty secretary of Joseph M. Moskowitz, with a long Brenda bob and pallor, gave a Hollywood touch to the proceedings in a fetching high, black Cossack cap, and a black dress with a bodice tastily highlighted by horizontal rows of bright sequins.

Schenck's election bets were brought to light during Miss Sullivan's occupancy of the witness stand. The witness said with some hauteur that she had no idea what Schenck did with the money after he collected it.

The next witness, looking the very picture of a successful, high-powered business executive, said his name was Sam Silver and identified himself as the barber who runs the studio barber shop at Twentieth-Century Fox.

Known as Sam the barber man up and down Hollywood, and a character in the movie colony, Silver said he had an arrangement with Schenck to take care of Schenck's "barber business" for a fixed fee of $10 per week.

Fair Pay Put Forth

"Was that fair pay?" he was asked.

"Very fair!" Silver said judiciously, his eyes absently wandering over Schenck's balding dome.

Silver testified that he was paid weekly by Twentieth Century-Fox. Under cross-examination by Corbin, he said he had been told by Schenck's secretary that Schenck repaid this sum to the studio.

The final witness of the day, who was still on the stand when court recessed until tomorrow, was Dolph Schadler, head of the tax department of Loew's, Inc. He testified that he had made out Schenck's income tax returns since 1927 from figures supplied him. He said he had only met Schenck twice and had received no pay for this work except "that for seven years at Christmas time I have received a check for $150 from Schenck."

D. C. Doubles Nation in Rise Of Food Costs

Washington retail food prices have risen 2.5 per cent since last year in comparison with a national increase of 1.3 per cent, the Bureau of Labor Statistics revealed yesterday.

The bureau compared the prices on February 18, 1941, with those on February 13, 1940. A comparison also was made with prices January 14, 1941.

In the one-month period the price of fruits and vegetables rose 4.4 per cent here. Meats went up 2.9 per cent in Washington. Eggs showed a seasonal drop in price of 12.8 per cent.

In 51 cities, including Washington, meat prices February 18 had leaped as high as 26.6 per cent over prices the year before. The 26.6 per cent jump was in the price of pork chops. Salt pork increased 24.5 per cent, bacon 15.6 per cent and chuck roast 13.6.

Potatoes fell 23.9 per cent, spinach 21.6 per cent, and green beans 12.9 per cent. Apples rose 13 per cent and sweet potatoes 19 per cent in the year period.

Washington's average food prices, however, were still 1.2 per cent below the average of prices from 1935 to 1939 on February 18, but they had risen 1.1 per cent in the previous month.

Defense Will Put More Youth In Government, Ford Says

By the Associated Press

Ways, Ga., March 11.—Henry Ford would like to see more young men running this Nation's Government and believes the national defense program will be "educational to that end."

The Detroit automobile maker suggested that Government should function along industrial pattern and predicted that objectors to war "will make themselves heard" in America.

"If our young men are to do our fighting, why can't they run the country?" the 77-year-old industrialist asked in an interview just before leaving for Dearborn, Mich., after several weeks at his plantation home near here.

"The defense program will serve to build our youth physically, train them in leadership and at the same time introduce many of them to new vocations.

"With this training behind them, more young men will enter public office and the Nation will be better off, for the old heads have made a botch of things in many quarters.

"Government ought to be modeled more after industry, with advancement in office based entirely on ability and record of service."

On the subject of defense and education, he said:

"The defense program has brought out vividly that this country needs more men skilled in trades. By skilled I mean just that, not a mere smattering of a subject.

"Too many of our school graduates lack specialized training and have no particular destination when they set out upon the sea of commerce. I am glad to note that vocational schools and courses are springing up rapidly throughout the Nation."

Ford envisions a day "only several years off" when a farmer will grow most of the materials going into his motor car and perhaps provide the fuel from plants as well.

Binding Belgrade

The best that Yugoslavia could gain from the treaty of friendship and nonaggression she is ready to sign with Nazi Germany is a breathing spell of limited duration. Certainly Hitler would not hesitate to violate it should his purpose be served by so doing, as he has violated many similar pacts. His principal aim at the moment with respect to Yugoslavia is to isolate her. And that is precisely the goal he could accomplish by this nonaggression treaty.

Under this arrangement Belgrade's capitulation would not be complete. She is not ready to go the whole way into the Axis partnership, as her neighbors have done. It was realization of what joining the Axis would mean that led the opposition parties in Yugoslavia the other day to utter fierce protests against any move which would be destructive of their nation's independence. Yet Yugoslavia's isolation is so complete—she is surrounded by German-held territory on three sides—that the Belgrade authorities felt bound to meet Nazi demands at least part way.

Yugoslavia's action was to be accompanied by a face-saving device in addition to refusal to join the Axis. It is said that simultaneously with the pact with the Third Reich the Yugoslavs had announced their readiness to sign a similar treaty with Soviet Russia. Such a pact would tend to disarm government critics who are prepared to look askance on any deal with the Third Reich but who would welcome a pact with the Soviet Union. Actually a Yugoslav-Russian treaty would be meaningless if by virtue of a Yugoslav-German agreement Hitler is put in a position to liquidate the Italo-Greek war and make himself master of the entire Balkan Peninsula.

To interpret the inner meaning of these Balkan maneuverings is to look for a pin in a dark room. All one can hazard is what the news from Belgrade means in the immediate future. This is that a German attack on Greece would find Yugoslavia sitting on the sidelines, if she were permitted to stay there; and that Yugoslavia would not become a corridor over which German troops would move to attack Greece, if Belgrade's wishes were at all consulted. But Hitler does not appear willing to take Yugoslavia's wishes into account or take stock of her interests. He wants the Balkan kingdom to toe the line even as Rumania and Bulgaria have done, and now the Yugoslavs must decide whether to surrender or fight. There seems no such word as "compromise" in Hitler's lexicon.

Sherwood Anderson

After two or three false starts came the books by which Sherwood Anderson's ultimate place among American writers will probably be determined—the collections of tales called "Winesburg, Ohio" and "Triumph of the Egg." The first of these made its appearance in the same year as Somerset Maugham's "The Moon and Sixpence," and this coincidence seems to be mainly responsible for the oft-drawn but superficial and somewhat misleading analogy between the careers of Anderson and the French post-impressionist painter, Paul Gauguin. Painting had been Gauguin's avocation for several years before he decided to abandon his banking job and give himself entirely to it. Besides, Gauguin had been an important and well-known artist long before his flight to the South Seas. But when Anderson stalked out of the paint factory at Elyria, Ohio, he seems to have acted merely from some internal necessity, quite unconnected with the vocation he afterwards discovered.

Moreover, Gauguin, though no theorist, knew perfectly well what kind of pictures he wanted to paint. But it is doubtful, to say the least, that Sherwood Anderson was ever very clear about what he was trying to say. He was the sort of writer who feels intensely, reflects little and comprehends less. He lacked that almost indispensable equipment of a great novelist, a clear philosophy of life. Most of his characters seem, indeed, intent upon evading life at all hazards and by all possible expedients. They, too, act upon powerful and unrationalized impulses, that is to say, are victims of "neuroses" of one kind or another. However, their antics were received indulgently and even enthusiastically by a generation of readers nurtured in the Freudian revelation.

To say this, however, is not to deny that Anderson was a born storyteller, for he was. He had an admirable ear for the rhythms of colloquial speech, and his style had been unconsciously influenced by the best of models, Barrow and the Bible. These qualities were not of themselves enough to save him as a novelist, for lacking much idea of where they were going or why they needed to go, Anderson and his characters were soon floundering in the riverbed of his subjectivism and emotionalism. But in the short story, where it is necessary at all costs to keep one's head above water, he was often superb. And if a generation or two hence he is read at all, it will be for such stories as "I'm a Fool."

Lend-Lease Authority

Few more historic measures have been put on our statute books than the bill which the President signed yesterday. Mr. Roosevelt asked for the lend-lease authority when the British were scraping the bottom of their dollar resources. Their financing problem coincided with a tingling realization throughout the country that our security and our institutions were endangered by the spread of Japo-Hitlerism and by its threat to keep on spreading till a new world order had been established. A new attitude, accordingly, had to be adopted in place of the cash-and-carry system based upon a rigid neutrality. Mr. Roosevelt expressed it pithily in his address to Congress on January 6. In fact, he outlined a policy in place of an attitude, and it was "a determination that the democratic cause shall prevail," and then, as our peace aim, that in place of a Japo-Hitler closed world, we should seek to restore an order based on "the cooperation of free countries, working together in a friendly civilized society."

The primary weapon with which this policy is to be effected is the lend-lease authority. Under it we shall no longer sell munitions and other material on any cash-and-carry basis. The President hereafter may transfer title, lease, lend, or otherwise dispose of defense articles to "the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States," as well as sell them. This means that the President is not limited to any form or terms of disposal. Of course, there will be a return to the United States in addition to the security which we shall purchase, and in all probability Mr. Roosevelt has in mind such concessions as will be necessary to our country as a leader in the next world society, such as more fleet bases in both Atlantic and Pacific waters.

It was Senator Bennett Clark who was responsible for seeing that the wording of the act provided only for the transfer of title. The object was not to give the impression that we would transport or convoy the defense articles to fighting Britain. In another place in the act Congress also inserted a clause that nothing in the statute should be construed as authorizing such convoys. This is a kind of moral sanction on the President, though the consensus of constitutional lawyers is that the President as Commander in Chief has the power to convoy. The problem will arise when fighting Britain becomes beleaguered Britain in the Battle of the Atlantic.

The defense articles which the President may transfer to our fighting friends are divided into two broad categories. Those represented in our existing naval and military equipment are in the first category. And in this respect the Congress attached two strings which were not in the original bill. Mr. Roosevelt cannot transfer more than about 10 per cent in value ($1,300,000,000) of our existing armament, and he may not transfer even as much as this amount without prior consultation with the Chief of Staff or the Chief of Naval Operations. It is out of this category, which represents immediately available aid, that Mr. Roosevelt will begin his operations under the lend-lease authority.

The other category of "defense articles" are the munitions and materials which from now on will be coming out of our factories, or our "arsenal of democracy." Here the authorization is complete. But the power to render this aid is tempered by the firm hold which Congress wrote in the bill in respect of appropriations: In any case the President would have had to come before Congress for the money with which to finance and dispose of defense production. But Congress buttressed its final say over the lend-lease authority by providing for the specification of the Presidential requests. Mr. Roosevelt, in other words, cannot merely say he needs so many billions for "defense"; he must specify the goods and name the destination of the appropriations.

The President, accordingly, has already decided to ask for $7,000,000,000 definitely for aid to Britain. This lack of evasion may be useful in the world crisis as well as to Congress in making the meaning of our intervention in the world conflict doubly clear in the Axis capitals. The $7,000,000,000 is our first stake, though it will not go altogether into new production. It is an overall figure, and includes the $1,300,000,000 representing the limit of our existing establishment which may be transferred. Presumably this part of the fund will be paid over to the services and used by them for replacements.

Congress retains several other checks in addition to the power of the purse which was thus fortified in the lend-lease measure. A two-year time limit is one of the provisions. Indeed, even before the middle of 1943, it is provided that the powers under the act might be abrogated by concurrent resolution, though this provision is of dubious constitutionality. Finally, the President is called upon to report to Congress every three months on his lend-lease operations. In these provisos Congress and the Executive are banded together to realize the policy which generated this momentous measure.

The President undertook yesterday a responsibility the like of which one will comb history in vain to rival. It was left to Mr. Willkie in supporting the Lend-Lease Act to put this responsibility in the context of history. "We must lay," he said, "the moral, intellectual and spiritual foundations for the kind of world we want our children to inherit." But only with the unity which Senators Wiley and Vandenberg bespoke in the Senate on Monday and Representative Martin invoked in the House yesterday can the President live up to the trust which this measure reposes in him. Our President is no stronger and no more powerful than our American unity. Let us now take this for granted, and say with John Milton, "Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation, rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks."

Sign Of A Breakdown

Failure of the proposed District income-tax amendments on Monday is overshadowed by the irresponsible conduct in the House of Representatives by which the bill was defeated. Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee rightly compared the mood of the House to Joaquin Miller's "mad sea" which "shows his teeth" and "curls his lip . . . as if to bite." A seemingly deep-seated animus against the District of Columbia came to the surface and wrecked a carefully prepared and reasonable bill to eliminate the inequities of the present local income tax.

The most disturbing aspect of this performance was the lack of any attempt to consider the bill on its merits. Most of the opponents of the bill, who finally succeeded in scuttling it, were not familiar with its provisions and few sought enlightenment. Rather, the tenor of the debate was to the effect that Washington merchants and landlords are reaping profits from the Government pay roll; that real estate taxes should be heavier and that the income tax works to the disadvantage of people living here but claiming legal domicile in some of the States. The welfare of District residents for whom the House was supposed to be legislating was ignored, except by a handful of Congressmen sponsoring the bill. It was even suggested that if Washingtonians don't like the way Congress governs the District, they can move elsewhere.

That sort of irresponsible chatter from a legislative body in control of the Nation's Capital is rather sickening. It indicates a breakdown in our haphazard system of local government. For the House has refused to consider seriously the problem of creating an equitable revenue system for the District. Yet it has frequently denied local residents any control over their own municipal affairs. The problem was clearly and forcefully stated by Representative Dirksen after the tax bill had been so riddled by foolish amendments that it had to be sent back to the District Committee. "If we insist on holding the hands of control over the Nation's Capital and its people," he said, "obviously there has to be some measure of serious responsibility and appreciation for that job."

The effect of this fiasco in the House is to mock the District for its disfranchisement. Taxation without representation is in itself a denial of rights which are considered basic in the American system. When that power of taxing a voteless city is exercised in an arbitrary and irresponsible manner, the demand for democratization of the Capital ought to become irresistible. By its reckless action the House has thrown down a challenge that should be taken up by every American who sincerely believes in the principles of self-government.

SAGITTARIUS

I should like to see the centaur Sagittarius,
Fleet-hoofed, lithe-limbed, lordly to match the distance,
Twanging the bow as a god might twang the lightning,
Charging the arrow-flight with an eye of prescience,
Sending his heart, himself in the winging shaft.
Once in the forest green with the shadows shifting,
Willow and oak and poplar and silver maple,
Steady of hand as a painter drawing frescoes
Out of the plaster, I should like to see
Sagittarius
Sending his heart, himself in a winging shaft.
When I was a boy I had an arrow, an Indian arrow.
It sang in the wind as a bird might sing upsoaring,
Seeking its end for the joy of the flight and the seeking,
Making a neon arch in the summer sunshine,
Changing my heart, my will to a winging shaft.
Somewhere beyind the smoke and the scream of bombers,
Wanton and wild and artless as death, at dawn-flush
With water flowing and white clouds changing patterns,
I should like to see the centaur Sagittarius
Flinging his heart, himself in a winging shaft.

What About Russia?

The Soviet, according to all commentators and correspondents, remains a ?. However, there are four facts that are "straws" which indicate the way the wind blows:

First: Stalin does not trust Hitler and Hitler does not trust Stalin.

Second: Stalin evidently will oppose a "free Nazi hand" in the Balkans.

Third: Stalin doesn't wish to be bottled up in the Black Sea by Nazi control of the Dardanelles.

Fourth: The continued alliance of Turkey and Greece with Great Britain, without opposition from Russia.

Stalin is not stupid enough to ignore the vast resources of the British Empire, the United States and the entire Western Hemisphere, which are behind Great Britain and her allies in their fight against Nazi Germany.

It appears certain that Stalin has a lot of thinking to do before he welcomes the Nazis in the Balkans. Probably Stalin thinks, with Ben Franklin: "He that can have patience can have what he will." So Russia is still a ?.

Pay For Jobs

What's worrying the draftees today is, when the war is over and they come back facing the worst depression the world has ever known, will they have to pay $50 to get a hodcarrier's or laborer's job to support them and their families as members of the A. E. F. had to do to work on Government projects paid for by the taxpayers?

Subways Urged?

Lately there has been much talk about Washington's increasing housing shortage. According to some candid comments, if the shortage grows more acute Washingtonians will have an opportunity to appreciate the feelings of a humble sardine in a can.

It is my opinion that Washingtonians have sufficient opportunity for sardine appreciation whenever they consider their present transportation system. That this system is badly in need of overhauling and reorganization there is not much doubt. If there is any doubt, Washington's rapid growth and expansion will soon remove it.

Are there any plans afoot now to bring an adequate system of transportation to Washington, one that will get Mr. Citizen down on time and in comfort? In brief, a system that will obviate the necessity of a sleeper jump from Chevy Chase to Anacostia?

In the cars, while waiting for them to start again, one hears various comments about a subway for Washington. I would greatly appreciate hearing The Post's editorial suggestions in re this possible subway. WILLIAM ROBERT KAPP.

Lavender And Black

In your editorial, Classroom Reds, you addressed yet another slap at my much-maligned alma mater, City College, of New York.

After quoting an instructor as testifying that between 40 and 50 of his faculty colleagues were or are members of the Communist Party, you make this bland assertion:

"His statements will scarcely be received with surprise by those who have followed all the turmoils and alarms at that institution in the last few years."

May I, as a June '40 graduate of City College ask, "What turmoils and alarms?" I know of no student demonstration which could possibly be interpreted as the instigation of a Communistic faculty.

If there are 50 Communist teachers at City College, their effect is negligible. Communists have always been a very small minority of the 25,000 students enrolled at City College. The school colors are lavender and black, not red.

The charge of "Communist" is an excuse used against City College by the enemies of tax-supported higher education. 'It has been used before. It is being used now.

The Taxpayers' Union of New York goes so far as to brand City College "a branch office of Moscow" (I quote Sunday's New York Times) on the basis of the same testimony which you quoted. It calls on Mayor LaGuardia to eliminate from the budget $10,000,000 appropriated for maintenance of the city colleges—to close them down.

Those taxpayers are not thinking of democracy, but of their pocketbooks. They are forgetting that only by means of wider education and greater tolerance can our democracy achieve its fullest potentialities.

Your own viewpoint is filled with intolerance. Otherwise you would have shown greater respect for the youth of our country and for democracy as well by not being so afraid of "indoctrination with the Marxist gospel." City College students, like other intelligent people, think for themselves.

The Windjammers

Universal indignation should be expressed toward those misguided politicians who risked a major world disaster by windjamming for 57 days, obstructing preparedness for the aggressors' destiny—deciding spring drive.

Deluded isolationists sabotaged the victory for democracy in 1919, and made vain the sacrifices of our brave soldiers, and now they act as if the Nazis are right in their murderous treatment of small, helpless nations. But if this is so, then dishonesty, not honesty, is the best policy; vice, not virtue, is its own reward, and we may as well close up all of our churches, quit worshiping God, and start worshiping the devil!

Have we no vision to see afar off the appalling effects upon everything worth living for in America if Hitler wins with his infernal policies? Have we no concern for the future welfare of our children and grandchildren?

Let Christian America rise up in her old-time humaneness, and champion the cause of the homeless, heartbroken and pitiful victims of this inhuman war!

Strikes Called Mockery Of Democracy

In view of the many trite remarks on "democracy" one hears these days, the frequency with which strikes occur in plants operating on contracts for national defense, where a few thousand men throw many thousands out of work, certainly makes a mockery of democracy.

Is it democratic for a few thousand highly paid men to quit work and prevent millions of other men, unemployed and anxious to obtain work, from taking their places? Is it democratic for these thousands to give up their jobs simply because other men not belonging to their unions are given work alongside them? Is it democratic for a union to require an unemployed man to pay tribute and join a union before he may work on a job making munitions for national defense? On more than one occasion I have heard this identical question asked of a union man, over the air, but not once have I heard an unequivocal reply. A direct reply is always evaded. And the question has generally been put in this manner: "Do you consider it right that my son should be required to give up a lucrative job and be drafted to fight for the Nation for $21 or $30 per month while I must pay to get a job to build quarters for that son to live in or to manufacture the munitions which that son must use in the national defense?" As I have said, a direct answer to that question is invariably evaded.

Consideration of questions like these will cause anyone to realize to what a pass "democracy" has come in these days. Talk about democracy when millions of men are begging for a chance to earn a living and a few thousands are deliberately shutting up plants, throwing many times their number out of work and at the same time being protected in this by the laws of the Federal Government—just as a few years ago men were closing plants by means of the "sit-down" strike and were actually being upheld in this by State and Federal officials on the grounds of some "proprietary right to his job." On more than one occasion I have heard this question discussed in nationally known forums over the air, and always the person who believed the sit-down strikers had no right to take possession of a plant has been shut up by the other speakers. Not once have I heard such person allowed fully to present his views.

Now we hear of Federal legislation to "prevent" strikes. I do not believe Congress will ever pass a law preventing anyone, outside of the armed forces, from quitting any job he does not desire to work on. However, no man or body of men, refusing to work on a job should be allowed to prevent any other man from working who desires to work.

Labor unions would, of course, jump at this as an opportunity for employers to beat down wages by means of competition among laborers. This could be prevented by requiring a Federal board of an equal number of representatives of capital and labor headed by some impartial chairman, say, a judge of the Federal bench, to investigate and decide on a fair price for labor and on all other questions in dispute, and having arrived at a decision require both parties to abide by the same on pain of penalty for the employer and of throwing the shop open to any other workers who cared to accept work under the decision of the board in the case of labor.

Any other arrangement which allows a small percentage of highly paid men to close up a plant manufacturing much-needed products in times like these when there are millions of unemployed men living under subnormal conditions and anxious to work is a mockery of democracy. If legislators and those in authority do not move to correct these deplorable and undemocratic conditions it is undoubtedly because of fear of the power of labor and shows the deplorable condition of the times.

It is the duty of the Government to fill the places of those who refuse to work with men desiring work and to protect such men while at work. P. H.

The Post Impressionist

Sweet Vengeance

I think at last I have found an opportunity to gain revenge upon a skulking friend who during the past year has made life pretty miserable for me.

This person, for no better reason than a determination to indulge a cheap sense of humor, has sent my name to every sucker list in the country. Hardly had I recovered from countless letters from Charles Atlas telling me that if I didn't want a body beautiful I shouldn't have written him in the first place, and convincing another company that I honestly was not interested in raising bees, when a leering mail man started bringing me huge pamphlets on how to build a rifle range, communications from three lonely hearts clubs, two schools of electricity and a compelling letter advising me that I can double my income by learning to repair radios. At the moment I am embroiled in a controversy with an establishment which warns me of the dangers of not paying for a huge carton of salve received last summer which I was supposed to sell in order to obtain a fine air rifle. Their current opinion of my integrity is nil.

But now the fellow wants to write for "The Post Impressionist", and in admitting his ambition to me he has left himself vulnerable to retribution.

He has characteristically approached the subject in a patronizing and probably envious vein. Before I quote his first letter, I should explain that in writing to me, he uses the nom de plume "Beemster" for sinister reasons which I shall not explain. I quote:

"Dear Mr. Magruder:

"Last Sunday night, as you may not recall, you said something about my writing a column or two for The Post. I did. I wrote two utterly brilliant things and sent them in. Since then—silence. Now maybe you can answer a few questions about that. How long does it take to find out that your stuff has been filed in the wastebasket? Do you write your matchless prose on yellow paper or use something civilized? What kind of a typewriter do you use? Where do you get your incomparable ideas?

"Is it true that you are at your desk at six in the morning, drink two quarts of vodka and then work steadily until one, when you knock off a light lunch of whipped cream and Scotch?

"I should like to learn as much about this 'game' as possible, your working habits and all that. Of course it is true that I don't come from the hard riding, hard drinking Virginia country club set. And alas, I have never been steeped in the best traditions of the Old South. (He doubtless refers here with puerile envy to my column, 'Lee, the American'). Do you really and truly think there is a chance for me? A word, a movement of the lips even, from you would mean so much to me

"I don't expect you to answer this during working hours—that time belongs to your public—but maybe when you stop work in the morning at 1—just maybe—a line or two? BEEMSTER."

Touched momentarily by his boyish desire for knowledge, I replied:

"Your letter, Beemster, impressed me as having been written by an ambitious young man. I am never too busy to reply if it will be of any service to a fellow determined to get to the top some day. Never!

"I couldn't help but be amused at your query as to what sort of typewriter I use. Of course you shouldn't be expected to know that we writers don't use the same machine for every type of work. For a light, breezy, witty essay, I would choose a silver machine with a crackle finish, and for a more somber tome, a black typewriter would be the thing. If our opus is to be romantic, let us say a light blue or something in a pastel shade.

"In short, Beemster, mood is the thing. Remember that—mood, mood—and atmosphere. My brother picks up a nice bit of change occasionally when I hire him to create atmosphere. For light stuff, I ask him to stand outside the window and give happy little chirps that might emanate from a canary. When I am writing something more weighty, I let him stand behind my left shoulder and sing the Funeral March, although his rendition at certain times is so ludicrous that my mood vanishes.

"Yours for success. MAGRUDER."

Beemster replied:

"Dear Mr. Magruder:

"Thank you so much for your prompt and literate reply. It was too much to hope for. You of the writing world just don't realize what it means to us struggling beginners to receive a word from you—typed, perhaps, on the same typewriter that wrote 'Lee, the American.' A little from you goes a long way, Mr. Magruder.

"That dodge about the typewriters is a new one on me. I was under the impression that writers generally had one battered old portable on which they knocked out all their best stuff. And by the way, you didn't tell me what kind of a ribbon you use or whether you write your columns on white or yellow paper. Nor do you say anything about your working habits.

"Mr. Magruder, I fought for you the other night, when a low, sneering fellow made a crack about writers in general. I let him have my right cross before he indulged in personalities and today is my first day out of the house since that episode. Respectfully, BEEMSTER."

And now my stanch friend, your spirit will be broken, your illusions shattered, for the above is conclusive proof that a man you defended with your last ounce of physical strength, a man whom you idolized can stoop to base plagiarism without batting an eyelash.

You, trusting fellow, have helped write a very swell column—but you neglected to send it in. Thanks a million!

The Transport Workers' Strike

A STRIKE which indirectly involves the lives and convenience of potentially 7,000,000 persons, and which daily directly inconveniences and distresses 1,000,000 persons, becomes a public issue, outside the bounds of an employer-employe dispute. Such a strike is the one called by the Transport Workers Union against the Fifth Avenue Coach Co. and the New York City Omnibus Corporation.

The Transport Workers Union has a membership, I understand, of about 50,000, all of whom would be indirectly affected by the outcome of the strike. Directly affected are only 3,500 busmen.

But also directly affected are all the residents of Greater New York, especially the residents of Manhattan—affected whether they ride on buses or not; for all other public forms of transportation are congested, and hundreds of thousands have to walk, for there are no public means of transportation by which they can reach their destinations. Affected most of all, of course, are workers who must reach their jobs and who cannot afford taxicabs.

The strike, therefore, daily, hourly and every minute of its duration is a matter of public interest and convenience.

I HAVE MADE no snap judgment about this strike. I talked for upward of an hour with Mr. Austin Hogan, president of the New York local, in order to get the busmen's side of the case. I have also read carefully and thoroughly the statements issued by the two bus companies, together, documents of over 100 large pages—11 by 14 inches—and containing charts and statistics regarding the revenues, disbursements and profits of the companies, broken down into detailed figures of operating costs, covering wages, taxes, materials, fuel, etc.

From both sides I learn that the controversy arises over questions of fact regarding the financial status of the companies and their ability to meet either the union demands, or any further demands on the part of the union.

The Fifth Avenue Coach Co. claims an operating deficit for 1940 of $160,388.76. That is to say that the actual intake from the operation of the lines fell that much short of actual expenditures. They claim that the profits, which accrued from other sources—rents, interest and dividends from investments—enabled them to pay out $500,000 in dividends in 1940. The New York City Omnibus Corporation, on the other hand, showed an operating profit of $1,999,537.40, and was able to pay out in dividends the net income of $1,758,261.24.

THE UNION says the two companies are under joint ownership, and that the decline of the one company is more than balanced by the very high money-making capacity of the other.

The union's claims on both would boost costs, according to the companies, by a minimum of $3,245,927.11 a year, thus leaving the companies with a joint deficit of more than $1,000,000, reckoning income as of 1940.

The companies further state that they anticipate increased taxes, and that the demands of the unions are therefore "confiscatory."

THE UNIONS, in answer, reply, first, that the companies' dividends represent 8 per cent interest on the par value of stock, that the stockholders have already withdrawn three and a half times their investment in one of the companies, leaving themselves still an equity of three times their original investment, that the companies' estimate of the increase which their demands would add to costs does not correspond at all to their own figures, which are radically lower, and that anyhow they were representing demands as a basis of negotiation and never expected to get all that they asked for. They insist that they called the strike because after four conferences they found not the slightest disposition on the part of the companies to yield an ich or offer any counterproposals whatsoever. On the contrary, they found the employers sticking to counterdemands for a reduction of present benefits on the ground that the last contract concluded with the union had been in too optimistic anticipation of business.

Add to this the claim of the companies that the wages paid are on the average above the prevailing rate of wage for identical work or in industries requiring approximately the same skills, and the union's demand for an eight-hour day and their claim that although the higher brackets are as well paid or better than by other bus companies, the men in the lower brackets are worse paid.

THIS SUMS UP, I think, the main issues in the controversy, which primarily—and as confirmed by both the union and the companies—hinges around the question of the financial status of the companies.

Now, I do not pretend to know which version concerning the financial status of the companies is correct. The union bases its premises on figures submitted to it by the companies and comes to quite different conclusions from those of the companies.

Which interpretation is correct is certainly out of the range of judgment of a columnist. The figures submitted to me were submitted by two frankly prejudiced parties.

But since a question of fact is involved it ought not to be difficult for some disinterested person or persons to find out the truth, if he or they have access to all the books. I understand that the company is willing to submit all its books and files to the Mayor or to a Mayor's committee as a basis either for mediation or arbitration.

THE UNION also claims that it is willing to negotiate or to mediate or arbitrate once the companies have shown some inclination to be prepared to yield anything.

On the other hand, the Mayor's office has been unable to establish any contact with Mr. Quill, the president of the union, since Saturday. Among the unionists there is talk of a long strike and among the rank and file even talk of sympathetic strikes.

It also seems likely that the union is acting with other ends in view—a desire to rehabilitate the union that has suffered membership losses from the putting of the publicly operated subways under civil service—and in anticipation of the expiration of other contracts in April and May—those with the Third Avenue company and the city subway.

IT SEEMS to this column that in view of varying claims between two prejudiced parties there is urgent need for a disinterested outside analysis, especially in a matter that involves millions of New Yorkers. The population of Manhattan alone is nearly two million. The union has to decide whether it is worth while to gain a victory by force, when it certainly might gain one, if there is any basis for its claims, by arbitration under a Mayor whose record with labor is quite exceptional. The union itself admits that wherever the Mayor has arbitrated labor has not lost out.

THE PUBLIC will eventually decide a dispute like this one, for it is the public that is forcibly involved and that suffers. The public has often shown extraordinary patience for the sake of labor gains, in cases where labor has obviously been treated with gross unfairness.

But there is not the slightest indication as far as I am able to find that this conflict is beyond the possibility of mediation and arbitration. If it is, and it is the companies' fault, as the unions claim, this strike would have had much more public tolerance if that fact could have been demonstrated. It has not been, and if it is the beginning of a wave of sympathetic strikes the public is likely to lose its patience in a big way.

End Of An Era

A Partnership

The lend-lease bill marks the end of an era which began with the rejection by the Senate of the Treaty of Versailles.

It is interesting to note that the Treaty of Versailles would have been ratified if it had required only a simple majority of the Senate. And the lend-lease bill probably would have been rejected if, like a treaty, it had required a two-thirds majority. The Treaty of Versailles won the votes of 57 Senators; 37 voted against it. The lend-lease bill passed 60 to 31, two short of a two-thirds majority.

The lend-lease bill does not mean that this country is going to participate in or underwrite a formal international organization comparable to the League of Nations. Only time can reveal what the United States will be willing to do when, and if, the war results in the defeat of the Axis.

It is a safe guess that the lend-lease bill would never have passed if it had implied any commitments concerning the organization of peace. Its purpose is to enable the British Empire—or the main parts of it—to survive, and if possible to defeat decisively the powers allied against it. The main argument made for it was that it would help to keep war away from us. Cold considerations of national security and of the balance of world power were the propelling forces behind this bill.

INTERNATIONALISTS of the old League of Nations school probably could not have budged this bill out of the committees of Congress. It was put through by people who felt that our national existence would, or might, be threatened by a Nazi-dominated Europe and Africa on one side, and a Japanese-dominated Eastern Asia and Oceania on the other.

The real division between most of the isolationists who stood against the bill and most of those who supported the bill was in their appraisal of the danger to the United States if Great Britain were destroyed. All except superheated propagandists and epithet-slingers know this. Some of the isolationists in Congress may have been over-imbued with an American characteristic: supreme confidence in our ability to take care of ourselves. Some of them are mentally too lazy to consult the best naval and military authorities. A few may be demagogic charlatans. A few are strict partisans, too small in spirit to put the national interest first. But there is scarcely one who can be called subversive or consciously anti-American or anti-democratic.

If the minority of internationalists of the old school hail the lend-lease bill as their victory, they will make a gross error. This bill does not mean that our entry into World War I was either right or wrong, or that we made a mistake, or did not make one, in not joining the League of Nations. The isolationists, as this column has stressed before, may have been 100 per cent right about World War I and about our post-war policy, yet wrong in opposing the lend-lease bill.

When policy is guided by the balance of power, it must shift as the balance of power shifts. Our policy is determined by a shift in the balance of power. What it will be if we succeed in rectifying the balance of power remains to be disclosed.

The President, it should be kept in mind, has become chary of discussion of peace objectives—except in the most general terms. He realizes that our first objecive is to "win the war." That means to save British naval power, based on Great Britain and other key points, and, if possible, to destroy the Nazi movement.

What the bill obviously does do is to tie the British Empire very closely to us. It makes us potentially the senior partner. The junior partner is taking the punishment, doing the fighting. But it cannot survive without the senior partner. The senior partner, on the other hand, has a chance of surviving, even if the junior partner goes down. In such event, it will absorb at least part of the junior partner's assets.

IF THE BRITISH WIN, and we play our cards correctly, we can determine the main outlines of the peace. Probably if we are wise we will not concern ourselves with the details of the settlement. Our first concern is with who controls the sea and the air. Possibly, from a cold-blooded viewpoint, our first concern will be to prevent any power except Great Britain and ourselves from having or building any naval ships and any combat planes. As between the British Empire and ourselves, there is no doubt as to who could hold the upper hand. We have the superior industrial resources.

Against complete control of the seas and the air, land armies would have only passing importance.

Since the destruction of the French army, the real question has been whether most of the world would be organized according to the Nazi scheme, under German direction, or in accordance with ideas more acceptable to us: whether Great Britain and part of its Empire would be a Nazi satellite or a friendly buffer for us.

The lend-lease bill marks the end of an era. But it does not mean necessarily a return to the path of Wilson. It may mean, instead, an era in which the United States determines the main pattern of the world by holding the high cards of naval and air power.

The Labor Situation

BEHIND THE President's press conference indication of dissatisfaction with the labor picture, there was a long course of gloomy warnings from Speaker Sam Rayburn and the other House leaders. Jurisdictional strikes, sympathy strikes, excessive, union dues, radical leadership in the C. I. O., and labor racketeering in the A. F. of L. have combined to produce strong antilabor sentiment in the rank and file of House members. The leaders told the President that unless he seemed willing to act in the matter himself, it might be impossible to hold the House back from a serious antilabor stampede.

ALSOP

The House leaders' advice to the President was to call in the chieftains of the A. F. of L. and C. I. O., point out the state of feeling on the Hill, and threaten active White House support for curbs on labor if the labor chieftains could not keep their followers in order. The President is strongly opposed to the anti-strike bill and other labor curbs now under consideration in the House Judiciary Committee, thinks the badness of the labor picture exaggerated, and has the pro-labor New Deal faction of his subordinates to consider.

Consequently at his press conference he limited himself to condemning jurisdictional strikes, and expressing approval of a plan for a labor mediation board, like the War Labor Board of the last war, to work for labor peace.

THE PRESIDENT'S action was only a stage in a long and probably very difficult process, the end result of which no one can now foresee. Clearly, no mere gesture such as the President has made is going to take care of the labor problem. At the moment, there are reported to be strikes at 21 plants with defense orders and at four Army construction projects. Considering the size of the defense program and the normal strike curve in such times as these, this is not really alarming. But the problem even now threatens to grow with great suddenness and violence.

There is immediate danger on two main industrial fronts, coal and steel. The contract between the bituminous coal operators and John L. Lewis' United Mine-workers expires March 31, and negotiations for a new contract are already in progress. The coal operators are making money. The miners want a larger share of the revenue. Lewis himself, fuller than ever of isolationist and anti-Rooseveltian fervor, is understood to be anything but averse to making the negotiations the occasion of a big row. Furthermore, the Bituminous Coal Act, passage of which through Congress was the operators' price for signing with Lewis, also expires in April, and the operators want it repassed before they commit themselves with the union.

On the steel front, C. I. O. President Philip Murray's Steel Workers Organizing Committee has already notified United States Steel that their contract must be reopened and wages increased, and talks are in progress. The S. W. O. C.-Bethlehem Steel relationship is still far from satisfactory, and the steel independents continue to hold out against the union. The possibilities of trouble in steel are almost as great, in fact, as they are in coal. And if the trouble is due, it will come soon.

AS FOR OTHER labor troubles that can be foreseen further ahead, they are innumerable. The Ford plants are as recalcitrant to organization as ever. In the largely unorganized aircraft industry, there is an A. F. of L.-C. I. O. battle for control, and the C. I. O. organizing committee is composed of the most left-wing element, including a number of reputed Communists or fellow travelers from the C. I. O. auto workers' union. The Justice Department has on record at least one case of an A. F. of L. union in the construction field which is keeping old members out of work and taking on new ones in order to get the large initiation fees. And these are only three instances among many. In short, without attempting to pass on the rights and wrongs in any of the controversies or to distribute the blame, any moderately intelligent person can see that the labor situation is bound to become political dynamite.

Whatever the rights and wrongs, as the labor problem grows more acute it may be assumed that the demand for strong measures to deal with it will grow proportionately more insistent both in the country and in Congress. The worst of it is that this demand is extremely likely to find the Administration disunited and without a coherent policy.

The New Dealers, and particularly the younger members of the group, scornfully laugh off such political storm signals as the sentiment in the House, and are all for giving labor "a place at the council table" and supporting the unions at almost all times. At the OPM, William S. Knudsen has come out against an anti-strike bill, but after considering the problem alone, without consulting his codirector, Sidney Hillman, has indorsed a mediation board and a "cooling off" process before permitting strikes.

KINTNER

HILLMAN is understood to regard the present machinery for coping with labor problems as perfectly adequate. Then at the Labor Department, Secretary Frances Perkins is said to dislike the "cooling off" process, but to be in favor of a mediation board. And, finally, at the White House, the President has now indorsed a mediation board, but is pulled hither and yon on all other issues arising from the situation by the manifold factions around him.

Perhaps the wisest approach is that of the little group of particularly enlightened businessmen in the Army and Navy Departments. They are perfectly ready to take over the plants of industrialists hampering the defense program by flouting such acknowledged legal rights of labor as that of collective bargaining, but are equally prepared to be tough with labor if such groups as the left-wingers in the C. I. O. aircraft organizing committee make unnecessary difficulties. But such grim determination to think first and only of defense remains sadly rare.

Union Authority

IT IS NATURAL to wonder what motive the national Administration may have in helping the unions to round up vast numbers of citizens under their rule of subgovernments. My idea is that with the decline of the several States as subunits, thanks to the apathy and civic weariness of the people and the recklessness of politicians, it is intended to promote the unions to a position of established and recognized authority in the Nation.

We are going through an evolution and the States are decaying rapidly. Their decline is outwardly apparent, but the invisible decay is more serious. For eight years they have been preying on one another through their Senators and Representatives, and their Governors have been busting into Washington to hack off living hunks of the flesh of the whole Union to throw to their ravenous constituents back home as political bait.

These public men boast proudly, if thoughtlessly, of the amounts which they have been able to wangle out of the national Treasury, and the people have never paused to reflect the "Guv'ment" is, after all, only the whole body of all the States. The States have defaulted their responsibilities and the Federal Government has eagerly assumed them, and each such default has reduced by just that much the independent power of the State and enhanced by that much the central power of the National Government.

THE STATES have even abdicated their exclusive local duty to punish embezzlers, and the Department of Justice has turned the Federal courts into police courts to deal with such trash under the Revenue Act, the postal laws, the Sherman Act and an old act covering conspiracies to steal elections.

Now the unions are, by and large, a little worse, normally, than the State Governments, but their present power, though great, is petty compared with the power which they would possess if the big organizations would settle their feud and consolidate. This they eventually will do, and Federal laws or policies will be adopted bringing them under Federal control. They will cooperate with the Government, but industry will obey.

With 20 million workers, a feasible figure, enrolled in the unions, these organizations would rank before the States in national influence. It must be kept in mind that this Government prefers class groups to geographical units.

We will not have in Congress "the gentleman from the teachers' union" or "the gentleman from the carpenters" instead of "the gentleman from Illinois" or "Alabama." They will not wear their union tags, but they will represent union organizations, nevertheless, and eventually everyone who works will belong to some union. The union elections will acquire first-class political importance when the candidates for the public elections are selected in the unions, subject, of course, to devious union politics.

It may have been noticed that President Roosevelt has given the unions great encouragement and ignored their sins, while industry and many of the rank and file wailed piteously in their misery, but it will be noticed also that when the President, with his fine sense of things, decided that the unions should be pressed into line his suggestion conveyed no hint of antagonism. They will be induced and persuaded to cooperate with the national Government in return for favors already received and other assistance yet to come, and the cooperation will presently harden into established custom and compulsion.

Possibly they will be forced to yield to some degree of supervision over their internal affairs, such as finances, elections and trials. That would not embarrass the boss unioneers unduly, because, after all, the politicians of the cities and States have enjoyed great freedom while beholden to the national Government.

This evolution will be pretty painful on the middle class and the employers, but their case seems hopeless, anyway.

Hitler And Vichy

By Barnet Nover

Leaving No Stone Unturned

ADMIRAL JEAN DARLAN'S intemperate outburst against the British blockade and his threat to convoy food shipments to France are as important for their timing as for their substance.

NOVER

The food situation in unoccupied France is not good. There can be no argument on that score. But who is to blame? Is it the British? Or is it Hitler? Admiral Darlan who, having replaced Pierre Laval in Vichy's No. 2 post, is beginning to talk like him, insists that the fault lies with France's late ally. The British blockade, Darlan told correspondents on Monday, is "ineffective for the purposes of the war." He went so far as to characterize it as "imbecile." At the same time he was full of praise for the action of the German authorities in releasing 220,000 tons of wheat that they blocked for requisitioning in the occupied area. "The Germans in this instance," he said, "have been more generous and humanitarian than the British."

ADMIRAL DARLAN did not mention that a very important reason for the food shortage in unoccupied France is that the area under Vichy's control is separated from occupied France by what is tantamount to a hermetically sealed border. The ostensible reason given by the Nazis for keeping that border closed is to prevent military information from leaking out from the area under military occupation to the unoccupied zone. That purpose could be served, however, without preventing an exchange of goods, including food, between the two zones. Most of France's wheat crop, incidentally, is produced in the occupied area.

The real reason why Hitler insists on keeping the frontier closed between occupied and unoccupied France is that he can use that intolerable state of affairs as a bargaining point in his dealings with Vichy, just as he can use the presence in German prison camps of 2,000,000 French prisoners for the same purpose.

In the meantime both ends of France have been systematically looted by the Nazis. In the occupied zone the method employed is the familiar one of forcing everyone to use occupation marks which the conquerors can float in unlimited quantities and use to buy up everything they do not directly requisition. In the unoccupied area the procedure has been different but the result has been the same. A huge sum has been levied on the Vichy government, ostensibly to cover the costs of occupation and the funds thus turned over to the Nazis have been employed by them to purchase available supplies.

Indeed, according to Dr. Frederick Strauss, economist of the United States Department of Agriculture, France could feed itself, even though its markets and sources of supply were cut off by the British blockade, if the Nazis did not intervene to prevent this from happening.

Despite what Admiral Darlan calls the "generous and humanitarian" gesture of the Germans in releasing some of the wheat they stole from occupied France, the fact is that Hitler is not interested in feeding the French. At the moment it serves his purpose far more to keep them hungry. For if they get hungry enough one of two things may happen, either of them advantageous to the Third Reich.

The first possibility is that the French will get so hungry that the Vichy government will be forced to come to terms with Berlin in return for a few more "generous and humanitarian gestures." The second possibility is that the British will take pity on the French, for whom they have very real sympathy, and permit food shipments to go through the blockade. But since the blockade is a weapon without which Great Britain might not be able to win the war, excessive tenderness by the British toward the people of unoccupied France would be self-defeating. And if Great Britain loses the war all French hopes of reestablishing their nation as a truly independent entity will go by the boards.

HITLER'S AIMS vis-a-vis Vichy have always been clear. He was quite willing to permit the establishment of an unoccupied area because it suited his purpose to do so. That action immobilized the French fleet and left open the possibility that it might ultimately be taken over by the Reich. It also inhibited the possibility of the war being continued by the French from their colonies. Had French Africa continued in the war Italy would have been knocked out long ago.

When Hitler agreed to an armistice with the men of Vichy he anticipated, and so did they, an early British defeat. Once it became clear that the British would not capitulate and were capable of fighting back, Hitler began to put pressure on Vichy to "cooperate" with the Third Reich not only in the economic sphere but also in the sphere of military and naval action. At the very least he sought from Vichy a commitment whereby German troops and planes could make use of France's Mediterranean bases and the French African base at Bizerte.

SUCH AN AGREEMENT was favored by Pierre Laval, the No. 1 French Quisling. But it met with opposition from Marshal Petain, Gen. Weygand and others. Unlike some of their self-appointed leaders the French people are not anti-British. They realize that their only hope of salvation lies in a British victory. And their attitude has found some reflection in the attitude of the Vichy government. But this resistance to Hitler's extreme demands did not result in any lessening of Nazi pressure on Vichy. That pressure has steadily grown.

At a time when his armies are occupying Bulgaria and threatening Yugoslavia, Turkey and Greece, he is not forgetting the usefulness of a thrust against British land forces in Libya and their fleet in the central Mediterranean from the direction of French North Africa. A more cooperative spirit by Vichy would help Hitler considerably at this time. That is why, despite repeated pledges that France plans to defend her empire against any and all attackers, the Darlan outburst against Great Britain is an ominous development. It suggests the possibility that the men of Vichy are at least prepared to cooperate with Berlin to the extent of poisoning the minds of the French people against their former allies by blaming the latter for the lack of food in unoccupied France and thus make it possible ultimately to swing public sentiment behind a pro-Nazi course. Being, for the most part, anti-British themselves and defeatist, it is easy enough for the men of Vichy to take this line. The difference between Laval and Darlan is that whereas Laval is primarily pro-Nazi, Darlan is primarily anti-British. Under existing cricumstances, however, that makes them brothers under the skin.

Austrians Discontented, Refugees Say

By G. E. R. Gedye
Copyright by New York Times

Istanbul, Turkey, March 11.—Refugees from Austria arriving here give a depressing picture of conditions there.

The refugees in question include Socialists, clericals, Communists and monarchists, and the most outstanding feature noted in conversation with them was the abandonment of normal political differences in the desire to see a reversal of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's coup of 1938.

Refugees from Vienna said that its characteristic charm had long vanished. The once heavily dressed shop windows are drab and colorless; the streets are mostly filled with people in shabby peasant dress, looking like those of a little Bavarian market town.

As in the Reich, clothing and boots are hard to come by, and there are frequent minor demonstrations in which the voluble Viennese market women play a prominent role. Discontent is widespread, but so far it has had no effective outlet.

There is considerable fraternization between Czechs and Austrians, including the discontented Austrian troops who are garrisoning in Czechoslovakia, some units which have been sent to concentration camps because they were found circulating anti-Nazi literature in German supplied by underground Czech organizations.

Talk of Danubian Federation

There is much talk of Austria entering a Danubian federation at the side of Czechoslovakia after the war. The Germans are trying to create bad blood between Austrians and Czechs by expelling Czechs from a number of districts of their own country and colonize these with imported Austrians.

The Nazis are exploiting Austria in order to provide safe refuges from the Royal Air Force for party bosses and wealthy industrialists in the Castles of former Austrian aristocrats—and for the same reason, are using many villages and towns in the Austrian countryside to house German war veterans.

Wiener Neustadt and Woellersdorf, near Vienna, have been transformed into airplane and munitions producing centers for Germany. The discontent of the workers at being forced to attend party meetings is frequently voiced in deafening choruses of "Sieg Heil!" which prevent the speakers from making themselves heard.

The British Broadcasting Corporation broadcasts from London for Austria are widely listened to, the refugees said, despite severe penalties. But such is the growing hatred of Germany that there is increasing demand that the B. B. C. should give them a more specifically Austrian and non-German character.

"All free Austrians," said one Austrian Socialist, "consider they have a charter of liberty in Churchill's recent Glasgow speech in which he put Austria at the head of the invaded countries whose populations were growing daily more bitter and eagerly awaiting liberation."

In Austria, said a Catholic priest who was among those who escaped here, most people have heard of the "Free Austria" movement started by former Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg's former minister, Herr Rott, with headquarters in Toronto. Herr Rott, a left-wing clerical, is seeking to find a common platform for all Austrian parties.

ACER Movement Discussed

The movement of Dr. Ernst Karl Winter and a number of progressive Poles, Austrians and Czechs in the United States, which calls itself "American Committee on European Reconstruction," or "ACER," is also being eagerly discussed within Austria's Nazi-guarded frontiers. Dr. Winter, another progressive left-wing clerical who was appointed vice burgomaster of Vienna by the late Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, with the aim of reconciling Catholic and Socialist workmen, agrees with the Poles and Czechs that an Austria patterned on the British and American democracies must form one of a federated union of all the smaller states in southeastern Europe which are situated between Germany, Italy and Russia.

The Austrian communist party, said a communist refugee, undeterred by the temporary accommodation between Joseph Stalin and Herr Hitler, is working hard underground on the orders of the Moscow comintern to undermine Nazism. Austria's illegal organizations in Vienna were stated to have prepared a manifesto for tomorrow calling on all true Austrians to hinder the Nazis wherever they could, to carry out sabotage and to try to keep up communications with their foreign "free Austria" organization which is working for the liberation of the country from the Nazis.

"Its capital degraded to the level of a third-rate provincial town, its youth sent out to die for alien German interests, the whole country turned into one vast munitions area certain one day to be devastated by the R. A. F.—such is Hitler's revenge on a city which inured him in his strident youth," said one of the refugees.

Nazis'll Get What Italians Got, Mediterranean Admiral Says

By Solon Gregoriades
International News Service Writer

Somewhere in the Mediterranean, March 11.—Britain will drive the German Luftwaffe out of the Mediterranean, just as the Italian air force was blasted into flight months ago, Admiral Sir Andrew Browne Cunningham, commander in chief of the British Mediterranean Fleet, pledged today.

Admiral Cunningham received this correspondent aboard his flagship, at a secret rendezvous in the Mediterranean, for an exclusive interview in which I inteded to ask questions about the spring campaign to come. I asked them, and was answered in clear, unqualified terms.

First, I asked this old British sea dog, who combined Beattie's vehemence with Jellicoe's sagacity, whether the German air force, once well in action, might not neutralize the power of his fleet.

"At the beginning," he said, "Germany operated her air force against us in the Sicilian Straits with results that are well known. At the beginning, our navy did not possess all its defense weapons and was taken by surprise."

Doubts Recurrence

(Admiral Cunningham was alluding to the Stuka attack on a British convoy in the Straits of Sicily several weeks ago in which the Nazis claimed wide damage to many British warships, but which the British declared resulted only in the sinking of the cruiser Southampton and damage to the aircraft carrier Illustrous. The Illustrous was able to proceed under her own power to Malta and although bombed again there, steamed on to Alexandria.)

"This will never happen again," the admiral continued. "I have no doubt that the Mediterranean will soon be cleared of the Germans just as it was cleared of all Italians."

Admiral Cunningham expressed a conviction that communications between his fleet and embattled Greece will continued uninterrupted.

"Of course, the enemy—well posted on certain strategical points—may cause us some temporary difficulties," he said. "But I am deeply convinced that we shall overcome them and that all communications will be secured."

I wanted to know how the Italians, with all their excellent naval vessels and bases, had suffered such ignominious defeats.

"Impressed Italians"

"The explanation can be given in one sentence," the admiral answered. "It can be attributed to the high quality of British and Greek sailors, or to the low quality of the Italians . . .

"The Italians are not good sailors as we are. This greatly affects the quality and value of their navy and we all know the results."

Italy, he pointed out, is deathly afraid of Britain's big battle cruisers.

"On January 9, my flagship came into contact off Calabria with an enemy warship," the admiral went on. "After a few ranging shots were fired from a distance of 13 miles, the enemy ship received a direct hit from one of our 16-inch guns.

"This incident greatly impressed the Italians who were literally terrified. Ever since then, their heavy units have never dared meet British battleships."

The last thing I wanted to know was whether extended German and Italian submarine campaigns this spring may endanger Britain's mastery of the seas. Cunningham shot back:

"Britain will keep her mastery. During this and for many more springs to come. We will still be dominating the seas."

Reich Forbids New Czech Schools

Berlin, March 11 (AP).—An ordinance by the Reich's minister of education, Bernhard Rust, forbade the opening of new institutions for teaching the Czech language to Czech citizens living in the Reich.

Schools and language courses which were in operation before the issuance of the order are not affected by it, nor does it apply to institutions of that nature in the protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia.

Belgian Steel Output Increases

Brussels, March 11 (AP).—Belgian iron and steel producing centers are gradually recovering from the effects of the war, according to a report of the "Direction Generale des Mines."

The output of pig iron rose to 116,360 tons during the last month, the report stated. During the same period 127,800 tons of steel was produced. This, it was said, amounted to 50 per cent of Belgium's pre-war steel production.

Caddy Is Own Boss in Kentucky

Frankfort, Ky., March 11 (AP).—The boy who sets up pins in a bowling alley may be an employe in Kentucky but the golf caddy is an independent contractor—in business for himself.

So ruled Clay Copeland, attorney for the state industrial relations department, in holding that caddies were exempt from Kentucky's minimum wage and hour act for women and minors.

The Right Answer To U. S.-English Motoring Customs

Columbus, Ohio, March 11 (AP).—Director Hal G. Sours of the Ohio Department of Highways has been puzzled a long time by something: Why do Americans drive on the right side of the road and Englishmen on the left?

He investigated and learned that Congestoga wagon drivers on the old Lancaster, Pa., pike established the American practice. Sours reported:

"The heavy freight vehicles were driven by a man who sat on the left wheel horse in order to have his right hand free to use his whip on the horses to the right and ahead of him. Therefore, he would pass oncoming vehicles to the right in order that he could see if his wheels to the left were clear. The deep ruts in the roads formed by these heavy wagons were followed by the lighter vehicles which came later.

Defense, Aid to Britain Slow U. S. Exports to Latin America

Trade-Control Restrictions Trouble Diplomats, Who Fear Complete Tie-up

By the Associated Press

Officials interested in promoting Latin-American trade are trying to keep national defense needs and aid to Britain from halting United States exports to other American republics.

The threat of such a condition has been a source of worry to Latin-American representatives in Washington, and day by day efforts of the State Department and Nelson A. Rockefeller's office have been directed toward smoothing out delays arising from export control restrictions.

Last week Rodolfo Michels, the Chilean Ambassador, in a conversation with Adolf Berle, Assistant Secretary of State, argued that red tape was causing much inconvenience by delaying delivery of needed exports to his country.

A recent survey disclosed that approximately one-third of the United States' four-billion-dollar export trade is subject to control restrictions in the interests of national defense.

The major commodities under such control include semimanufactured and manufactured steel products, leather, aircraft, chemicals, various types of machinery and machine tools, and strategic raw materials.

It was pointed out, however, that not all the troubles of Latin American buyers stem back to export license regulations.

In some cases where permits are readily granted, the question of priorities arises and in still other cases, materials needed are not available because of the greatly increased domestic demand.

Under the present system of export control licensing, an official explained, preference is first given Great Britain and Canada, then other nations victims of aggressors, and then Latin American purchasers. He added that as far as possible efforts are made to give Latin American buyers those amounts they received before the war.

Latin American sources pointed out, however, that because of the loss of sources of supply in Europe, many Central and South American nations have turned to the United States for articles previously obtained overseas.

Such nations as Argentina and Chile would fall in that category. In addition, other nations with close United States trade ties also are finding difficulty in filling their needs.

One diplomatic source who could not be quoted said that the regulations were becoming less obstructive each day. Another called the situation one that would naturally follow the United States' change from peace-time production to the peak of supplying extensive rearmament needs.

Legion Show Helps Blood Bank

Herbert R. Street, commander of the Government Printing Office American Legion Post, announced yesterday that the film "The Ramparts We Watch" will be shown in Harding Hall March 24, with half the proceeds going to the Children's Hospital blood and serum bank.

The other half, he said, will go into the legion group's welfare fund. Harding Hall is in the G. P. O. building. There will be three showings of the picture, the first beginning at 6:30 p. m. Admission will be 25 cents.

Street pointed out that the movie benefit is in addition to the blood bank film parties given in Harding Hall February 28 and March 1.

Meanwhile, the Children's Hospital Fund is being increased by sales of tickets for the spring style show to be given at the Hotel Mayflower on Friday by the Connecticut Avenue Association.

The entire proceeds of all tickets purchased at the office of The Washington Post, or ordered through The Post, will go to the blood and serum bank.

The American Legion, cosponsor of the blood bank drive with The Post and Station WJSV, urges those of its members planning to attend the style show to buy their tickets at The Post.

CONTINUE DRIVE FOR POLICE BOYS' CLUB—Although short of their $100,000 goal, campaigners meeting at yesterday's report luncheon agreed to continue their drive for sustaining funds for the Metropolitan Police Boys Club until March 21. Pledging to continue support were (left to right) Charles B. Dulcan, campaign chairman, and Mrs. Loraine L. Good, president of the Soroptimist Club, which contributed $200

A husky Washington policeman, John F. Ryan of the accident prevention unit, stole the show yesterday at the Metropolitan Police Boys Club report luncheon in the National Press Club auditorium.

The expected guest star, Helen Hayes, Washington-born actress, did not attend.

Upshot of Ryan's talk was that the fund campaigners, more than $18,000 short of their $100,000 goal, agreed to continue their drive until March 24. He is a member of the five-man special collection squad of the Police Department and told the campaigners that he and his buddies "have a system."

"When we start down a street, we miss nobody," said Ryan. "That's our system."

Another part of the system, said Ryan, is that "we try to impress on people when we're going around that we didn't make the parking law."

The parking regulations, Ryan indicated, make for some tough going in the collections.

Asked whether the campaign should go on, Ryan told the group "we haven't anywhere near got warmed up yet."

He pledged that the police group would push the campaign total past the $100,000 goal. Others in the squad who attended the luncheon were its leader, George Browning, attached to Police Headquarters, Frank Morrette, of the Harbor Police, and Wayland W. Whittemore, of the First Precinct. Harold W. Beachner, of the Fourth Precinct, is also a member.

Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, dean of the Columbus University School of Law, was guest speaker. Mrs. Loraine Leese Good, president of the Washington Soroptimist Club, presented a $200 check from her organization for the Boys Club campaign. Charles B. Dulcan, campaign chairman, and L. Gordon Leech, campaign director, spoke.

Total collections and pledges in yesterday were $81,643.

A. M. A. Inspector Denies Unfairness

request of Dr. James A. Cahill, jr., whose interest lay in Georgetown and Providence Hospitals. Dr. Peterson said his inspection of the other three institutions was in the nature of "routine revisits."

Questioned by Defense Counsel William E. Leahy, the witness said he neither discussed G. H. A. with anyone while here nor had he heard of the Federal employes' health cooperative before coming to Washington. (At this time, in the summer of 1937, G. H. A. was in process of organization.)

On the witness stand for three hours yesterday was Dr. William Dick Cutter, secretary of the council on medical education and hospitals, completing the testimony which he began on Monday. He is one of the 18 individual defendants, the others being the A. M. A. and District Medical Society.

Denies Prejudicial Acts

Speaking in a low but clear voice, the 62-year-old official steadfastly maintained that neither he nor the council committed any prejudicial acts against G. H. A., in the face of a gruelling cross-examination by Lewin.

He denied that the Mundt resolution was an "edict" of the AMA, only to be confronted with a letter written to a Tampa, Fla., hospital and signed by him in which it was described as such.

Dr. Cutter's explanation was that, while he had signed the letter, it had been written by a subordinate and he had not gone over it before affixing his signature.

"That word 'edict' was not proper and should not have been used," he testified.

The witness admitted calling to the attention of the five Washington hospitals which were inspected the fact that the A. M. A., in effect, would like to see their staffs limited to medical society members. But no pressure was put on them to achieve this end, Dr. Cutter declared.

Against Profiteering

In the course of direct examination by Leahy, Dr. Cutter mentioned that the American Medical Association once sought to halt what it called profiteering by hospitals in the making of X-ray pictures. Cases were known, he said, of hospitals clearing $50,000 to $75,000 by this means.

Hospitals, rather than prepayment clinics of the G. H. A. type, were the target of the A. M. A.'s disciplinary guns, the witness explained, adding that the practice was not appreciably curtailed, however.

Only other witnesses yesterday were two HOLC officials, Thomas H. Reavis and J. Francis Moore, who were subpenaed to produce and identify documents which the defense plans to offer in substantiation of its claim that Group Health Association was illegally financed by the HOLC.

Court Sustains Suit for Transfer Of Liquor License

Justice T. Alan Goldsborough of the District Court yesterday refused to dismiss the suit of Mrs. Eulalia Galloway, 917 Howard Road Southeast, to compel the A. B. C. Board to transfer a Class A liquor license from 1235 U Street Northwest to 2343 Nicholas Avenue Southeast.

Justice Goldsborough ruled that Mrs. Galloway was entitled to a hearing of her claims that she suffered heavy damage by withdrawal of permission for the transfer, which was granted by the board last August.

Before the permission was withdrawn, Mrs. Galloway contends, her husband, the late Thomas P. Galloway, borrowed $4,000 to change the Nichols Avenue place from a frame to a brick structure, as stipulated by the board in approving the transfer.

Radio Operators' Union Aide Denies Communist Charge

By the Associated Press

Murray Winocur, representing the Marine Department of the American Communications Association (C. I. O.) said yesterday a charge that his organization was dominated by the Communist party was "a ridiculous and vicious lie."

"It is impossible for any group, any clique, any faction or any party to dominate our organization, to determine its policies, to plan its activities or in any manner dictate or guide us," Winocur told the House Merchant Marine Committee. He was opposing the Dirksen bill to outlaw union hiring halls and give shipmasters unrestricted authority to hire and discharge seamen.

Nazis Ready For 'Go' Signal, Belgrade Says

By the Associated Press

Belgrade, March 11.—More than 500,000 Nazi troops were poised tonight on the Bulgarian frontiers with Turkey and Greece—and reliable reports from Sofia said only Adolf Hitler's "go" signal was awaited.

German headquarters are at Plovdiv, 40 miles from the Greek frontier, 80 from the Turkish. Nazi staff officers no longer dash about Sofia's streets. All are at Plovdiv—waiting.

The flow southward through mountain passes of tanks, supply trucks and troops has dwindled to a trickle.

Makeshift ambulances covered with red crosses, physicians and nurses, mostly make up the southward trek now.

Nazi supply trucks which for ten days have been racing back and forth from Sofia warehouses to the southern encampments with food, fuel and other war supplies were not coming back today.

Thousands of German and Bulgarian bomber and fighter planes are lined up outside hangars on air fields all over Bulgaria ready for instant action. Huge tents are used for hangars.

Within the last 48 hours an iron-clad German-Bulgarian military control has closed down on all phases of life. New restrictions are being imposed hourly. Many essentials are disappearing from shops as rationing is enforced.

In southern Bulgaria gangs of workmen have constructed underground depots for drums of gasoline needed by Nazi tanks, trucks and planes.

German military police now supervise all traffic on the main north-south highways and even in Sofia's streets. Germans who were in the country as civilians for months learning the language and geography are being used on these jobs.

German equipment flowing southward during the first days of occupation was all of first-rate quality, but recently has been second rate. Many trucks broke down in this latter stream, and were towed into Sofia for repairs.

Military experts identified much of the latter equipment as French—seized in last spring's offensive and now repainted.

Zapp Indicted Under Agent Act

indictments said, by failing to register themselves as agents of a foreign principal. When Zapp did file a registration with the State Department, the indictment charged, he periodically withheld vital information which would have exposed his connection with German agencies.

The grand jury accused Zapp of arranging for the American publishing firm of Howell, Siskin & Co. to issue the White Paper under its own imprint.

The White Paper, originally published by the Hitler government, purported to tell the contents of secret documents seized when Poland was conquered. The White Paper quoted William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to France, and Anthony D. Biddle, American Ambassador to Poland, as promising that the United States would fight for Poland. Both diplomatists, President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull repudiated the purported documents.

The grand jurors said that Zapp arranged for the American publication to look like the output of a regular publisher and conceal all connection with the German government or the German firm of Deutscher Verlag, which Zapp was representing.

Then, the indictment charged, Zapp got Ralph Beaver Strassburger to pay for free distribution of 60,000 copies of the American edition but concealed Strassburger's part in the scheme from those who got the books.

Strassburger, who was not indicted, graduated from the Naval Academy in 1905 and has served the American diplomatic service in Bucharest and Tokyo. He is now publisher of the Norristown (Pa.) Times-Herald, active in Republican politics and maintains a racing stable.

Pittsburgh Paper Publishes Again

Pittsburgh, March 11 (AP).—The Post Gazette tonight resumed publication after a two-day suspension due to a strike of the A. F. of L. Pittsburgh Newspaper Alliance when other craft unions agreed to ignore the walkout.

The alliance members included outside circulation men, who handled papers for about one-half of the city. After dispute about employment of a nonunion man during a special aid-Britain edition, the union called a strike Friday and threw a picket line about the newspaper's building.

Hibernians Plan 14-Hour Tribute To St. Patrick

The Commodore John Barry Division of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and its ladies auxiliary last night completed arrangements for a 14-hour celebration of St. Patrick's Day Monday.

The celebration will start with a Solemn High Mass at St. Patrick's Church at 10:30 a. m. and will be followed by a banquet and dance in the grand ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel. The banquet will start at 7 p. m.

The Rev. John Tracy Ellis of Catholic University will deliver the sermon at the mass. The Rev. Timothy MacCarthy, chaplain of the order, will be in charge of religious services during the celebration.

Jimmy Graham, Catholic University student and entertainer, will be master of ceremonies for the banquet entertainment program. Entertainers will include Elizabeth Healy, Agnes Dowd, Sylvester Reilly, Patrick Sullivan and Peter Slevan.

The committee on arrangements includes Joseph A. Daly, chairman; Miss Mary E. Cleary, vice chairman; F. M. Moriarity, treasurer, Miss Lillian E. Fay, secretary, and Leo A. Craven, ticket committee chairman.

Symphony Drive Presses On

With the National Symphony Orchestra fund standing $9,000 short of its goal of $107,600, L. Corrin Strong, president of the board of directors of the Symphony Association, said yesterday "there is still hope" that Washington will have its orchestra next year.

More than 100 volunteer workers are continuing their efforts to complete raising of the necessary amount following an extension of the Musician Union's March 15 deadline for attainment of the goal.

The volunteers have narrowed the margin of attainment from the official closing of the drive on February 20 when $32,000 was lacking from the necessary amount. Last Thursday the figure stood at $15,000 short of the $107,600 goal.

"That more than $20,000 has been paid in two and one-half weeks is a vastly encouraging fact," Strong said yesterday.

"Many of the orchestra's loyal friends have continued working since the general public campaign closed on February 20, and it is principally because of their splendid efforts that there is still hope we shall have a National Symphony Orchestra next year.

Matrons and Debs Inspect Defense Housing Facilities

Inspection of vacant rooms in Washington was begun yesterday by a corps of volunteer women from ten local civic, fraternal and church organizations.

The rooms, which were registered Monday with the Defense Housing Registry, were checked on 12 counts as a condition to being listed with the housing body for the benefit of the city's influx of defense workers.

At the same time, more than 500 additional rooms and apartments were registered during the day, keeping the Registry's three phones constantly busy and bringing the total listed in the first two days to 1,500.

Chairmen of the ten committees that began the inspections were: Mrs. M. O. Larenz, League of Women Voters; Mrs. Frances Goldberg, League of Women Shoppers; Mrs. Frank Schoerer, National Council of Catholic Women; Mrs. Ivy V. Ashburn, D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Katherine Smith, Women of the Moose; Mrs. H. A. Rochester, American Women's Voluntary Services; Mrs. Gearhart Gassel, Junior League; Mrs. G. C. D. Townsend, Church Women; Mrs. Judith Harmel, Jewish Community Center, and Mrs. Josephine B. Goodspeed, Alliance for Guidance of Rural Youth.

Debutantes, Junior Leaguers and other socially prominent young women served as drivers and assistants. More than 100 volunteers are expected to be trained within two or three weeks, according to Miss Saida L. Hartman, supervisor of the central rooms register.

Venus' Workshop

Ninety girls at George Washington University will step out of a Workshop for Remodeling the Figure, this week—with measurements nearer to their streamlined ideal.

In one of the final classes yesterday before the girls take to outdoor sports for the spring, 10 of them in bright-colored bathing suits and gym suits filled a room with assorted motions—all calculated to take off inches in some spots and put on inches in others.

A girl in a blue bathing suit did a "cross-scissors" hip roll on the floor to whittle her hips a bit more. Two sophomores in green gym suits lay on their backs, while their legs did a bicycling motion against the wall, in the interest of leg reducing. Two other girls on hands and knees alternately arched and lowered their backs in an exercise called "cat," because it resembles feline motions. It also strengthens back and abdominal muscles.

"I estimate that the 90 girls, among them, have lost a total of 150 inches through the hips," said an instructor on the sidelines.

The girl in the blue bathing suit did the cross-scissors hip roll for the twentieth time in succession, then sat up and gave a personal statistic:

"My hips were 36 inches when I started the course December 1. Now I've got them down to 35," she exulted. Since her bust measure is 33 inches, her proportions are now better.

And that's what the girls are driving at—to proportion themselves.

"We can't all be 32's or even 36's," said a girl who was somewhat larger. "But if we're in proportion and have good posture, we can make a good appearance," she added, and went back to a patient exercise for correcting round shoulders.

Twice a week since December 1, the workshop girls have been refashioning figures. The latter part of this week, their final measurements will be taken—to the certain envy of some 45 girls who have been on the waiting list for the capacity classes.

Miss Helen Lawrence, assistant professor of physical education, who has charge of the seven workshop classes, explained the careful scientific way in which the "weight normalizing" and figure-remodeling is carried on. A girl has to have a medical examination and a physical examination before she can enter the workshop. If she wants to carry on a diet along with the exercises, the head of the home economics department helps her work it out, and a woman physician is available at the university to consult on any problems, when that is needed.

One girl weighed 89 pounds when she entered the workshop. She now weighs 104 after having followed a diet planned specially for her. A girl weighed 190 pounds has reduced 45 pounds with a program of diet and exercise, along with medical treatment for a thyroid condition.

Each girl works on exercises adapted for her special problems. In a class of 10, no two may be doing the same thing at the same time. But out of all this assorted motion, are emerging girls who haven't stooped with getting better proportions, but who have taken it as part of their job also to sit, stand and walk properly.

Shirt Buying Hints Given By Expert

By Martha Ellyn
Post Household Editor

WHILE in a men's furnishing store recently I met a friend who was buying shirts for her husband. Asked why she was doing his shopping she gave these three reasons.

Martha Ellyn.

"He won't take the time from business to get them himself.

"After being married to a man a few years, one knows the colors and styles he prefers.

"Often when I am shopping I run across excellent shirt bargains so I buy because it is thrifty."

Such is the viewpoint of one housewife about buying men's shirts. But I also have some information from Miss Margaret Smith, specialist in textiles and clothing of the United States Bureau of Economics, on shirt purchasing.

"To insure a comfortable fit and long wear in a shirt—and to save washday and ironing headaches, learn to recognize the marks of quality before you buy," is her first suggestion.

Here are some other shirt buying guides Miss Smith gives. These points may be checked on by examining the shirt closely, by reading labels, by asking questions of clerks, and insisting on clear-cut answers from the salesperson or buyer.

Kind of Material

"Most shirts are made of cotton, the finer shirtings for dress or business wear, heavier shirtings for work shirts. Best cottons for shirts are those with a firm, smooth weave. Long floats or loose or fuzzy threads indicate weak cloth. Look on the label for shrinkage facts. Good quality shirts are preshrunk in all parts. According to the Federal Trade Commission regulations, any cotton material marked "preshrunk" and which will shrink further should carry the statement "will not shrink more than—per cent." To keep their fit, shirts should be guaranteed not to shrink more than 2 per cent. When you buy a colored shirt, read labels for facts about colorfastness. Shirts should be fast to light, washing, and perspiration. A shirt labeled, "vat dyed" usually is fast color.

"Check the following strategic parts of the shirt. Take out pins if you have to look at each part.

THE COLLAR—Get the right height to suit the wearer. Collars are made for long, average and short necks. See that collar points are sharp, evenly stitched and lie flat as possible. A good feature found on some shirts is "quilting" along the neckband. Innerlining of the collar should be as fully shrunk as the outer material.

THE FRONT PLEAT—The shirt can be ironed flat and look neat only if the innerlining is preshrunk to the same extent as the outer cloth. Firm and securely stitched buttonholes should be in the exact center of this pleat. If there is a design or pattern in the material this should be matched up along the edge of the pleat.

"Best buttons for business shirts are of pearl, four-holed and sewed on securely. Pearl or composition buttons are suitable for work shirts. Avoid metal buttons, because they will rust as soon as the paint wears off. Also steer clear of compressed paper buttons or unevenly shaped pearl buttons.

THE SLEEVE—"Make sure the sleeve is cut straight, that is, the lengthwise thread of the material runs parallel to the top creases of the sleeve. Any sleeve fullness should be worked in neatly at the back of the cuff, either in pleats or gathers. The placket in the sleeve needs to be long enough so the cuff can be laid out flat to iron.

BACK—"Make sure there is plenty of room in the back to allow free arm action. Backs of most work shirts are cut in one piece. Good business shirts have a generous yoke, with a full-cut lower back. Lower back fullness may be eased on to the yoke so it is hardly noticeable. Or it may be set in as pleats or gathers. These need to be located over the shoulder blades—not in the exact center back. The yoke of most well-cut shirts is rounded higher at the center back.

SEAMS AND STITCHING—"Look closely at all the seams, for poor stitching is one of the easiest ways to detect poor workmanship. The stitching should be close or even, with no knots either on the right or wrong sides.

Shops for Husband's Shirts

When Mrs. George Livingston Griesbauer goes out to buy shirts for her husband she knows there is more than color and material to consider. Above she is shown considering the type of collar on the shirt, for she knows that the collar must not only have the right height but that its points must be sharp, evenly stitched and lie as flat as possible

The States' Righters

"I suppose you heard about George Jostle's big promotion"

"Yes. Just another case of us Iowans making good."

"Iowan! I thought he was from New York!"

"Well, of course he's been living in New York, but he was really born in Iowa."

"But Mabel Bing said he was from her State, Illinois."

"Oh he did live in Chicago awhile, but he's really an Iowan."

"Well, I know he married an Indiana girl. Her people came from the same part of the State as mine."

"That was his second wife. I'm pretty sure his first wife came from Iowa."

"It's funny how the Mid-Westerners are running New York. They say at least half of the big men there are Hoosiers."

"Hoosiers! I've always heard there were more Iowans than anything else in New York. At least that's what the paper at home said.

II

"Have a nice drive Sunday?"

"Ye-es. The scenery in Pennsylvania is very nice."

"Say, if you want to see real scenery you ought to come to Missouri. Have you ever seen the Ozarks?"

"No, but as a matter of fact, I wouldn't trade the Minnesota lakes for all the scenery in Pennsylvania."

"All this Eastern scenery has been overadvertised. Another thing, their tourist camps can't compare with ours."

"Yes and take the climate. I nearly die in summer. Though I don't suppose it's any hotter than Missouri——"

"Oh, but our heat is a dry heat. Besides our nights are usually cool. I suppose though your winters are much colder——"

"Well our Minnesota cold is a dry cold. You really don't feel it."

III

"Was it a nice party?"

"Ye-es, only the chicken wasn't fried right. We always fry our chicken crisp in South Carolina."

"Say, you can't beat our Georgia fried chicken. You know they don't have nearly as nice parties as they do down home."

"Well, of course, Georgia is famous for its hospitality."

"Everybody says South Carolina people are the most hospitable in the world."

"Except South Carolina."

IV

"How'd you like the fashion show?"

"Oh, so-so. I didn't think much of the models."

"I didn't either. They ought to send down to Texas for some of our girls."

"Or Kentucky. That's really the home of beautiful women."

"Well, Texas girls are all the rage in New York. Nearly all the models and night club singers are from Texas."

"Another thing about the Kentucky girls, they really know how to dress I've heard man after man say——"

"Oh, Texas women are famous for their clothes. You ought to see our stores——"

"Well, all I know is I can always tell a Kentucky woman the minute I see her. There's just something about her . . ."

"I know it's the same way with a Texan."

"This is a very interesting part of the country, isn't it?"

"Yes—only the people make me so tired."

"What do you mean?"

"Oh, these Virginians and Marylanders always bragging about their States."

"I know what you mean. All of their ancestors were British lords."

"Exactly. Now in Kansas we don't have time for anything like that."

"Well, in California people just stand for what they are. All this boasting about ancestors is so silly and childish."

"Of course. Besides people in Kansas have just as good a background. Take our early abolitionists——"

New Coordinated Fabrics Dramatic In Use of Yarn

The big news in home furnishings this season is coordinated fabrics, according to the Cotton Textile Institute. Most of these coordinated groups contain a plain, a floral and a geometric figure or stripe on sateen, twill or chintz ground. Some repeat the same design on different weaves.

The skill and ingenuity with which leading manufacturers have adapted ideas in hand-loomed fabrics to machine production has produced textured cottons of striking originality. Dramatic use is made of ratine, cotton loop and chenille yarns. Metallic printing has been made as permanent as the colors with which it is used. Interesting, also, are two-faced fabrics which show, for example, stripes on one side and geometrics on the other.

In color the entire range of pink and rose tones rates top honors. Turquoise and medium blues follow, with sunny yellows, yellow-greens, mauve tones and tomato red adding important new notes.

Newly Engaged to Man She Loves, Girl Asks What To Wear and How to Act When She Goes With Him To Meet His Parents for the First Time

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: About four months ago I met a young man who is working here in the Government service. I didn't want to like him too much, as his home is in another large Eastern city and I thought he might be called back there, and our friendship would come to naught. But I learned to care for him in spite of myself. He dated me about once a fortnight and between dates, I could hardly wait to see him.

I assumed that I was just one of many girls to him, but last weekend he took me to call on his sister, who is his only relative in Washington. Later that evening, he told me he loved me and wanted us to be engaged. He said marriage would have to wait for some time, as he is going to college and his present job isn't permanent.

Now, he wants me to meet his parents soon. He has suggested that we spend a weekend with them. I do want to meet them, but wouldn't it be better just to go for the day? They live about five hours' journey away—going by bus. And if I go, should I take his mother a gift? In all probability, we shall go to see them within the next two months. I want to look my best, and I am wondering what to wear.

I have a new black net dress, strictly tailored, with a bolero jacket, trimmed in touches of white. I had been saving it for warmer weather. Would it be appropriate wear for traveling by bus? And supposing we go in early May, is that too soon to wear white accessories? I have thought of getting some black and white soes to wear with it. Should I go to visit the young man's parents at all at this time, since we cannot be married for a couple of years? And should I travel with him, if we go?

I am terribly frightened. I am afraid his mother won't like me, and I know he values his mother's opinion. Is there any special way I should act? I will thank you for any helpful suggestions. Sincerely. LIDA JEAN.

Wear 'Casual' Clothes And Behave Sincerely

DEAR L. J.: First, let's talk about dress. The black net jacket frock you have is not suitable for traveling, and should never be worn with black and white shoes. Most two-tone shoes shown nowadays (whether black and white, brown and white or blue and white) belong in the "spectator sports" classification of costuming, to be worn with flannels, linens, tub silks, etc. Your "little black net" is essentially a "dressy" dress—such as you might wear Sunday mornings for church; or to an afternoon tea; or for informal restaurant dining out, dancing or movie-going in the evening.

All white or black and white accessories would "kill" any distinction such a dress might achieve. Better accessories would be a plain broad-brimmed black hat, classic "opera" pumps in black, a large flat black bag and white washable chamois pull-on gloves, rather loosely fitting. But there is some question, in my mind, as to whether you need such a dress in a week-end wardrobe. At best, it would be an "extra" and not a "basic" outfit.

What you should wear for bus travel, even as late as mid-May, is either a casually styled, "dressmaker" type suit of light weight woolen fabric, or a tailored (perhaps "shirtwaist" style) dress in crepe or jersey or spun-rayon or such-like, with a top-coat of the so-called "box" or "swagger" cut. The suit probably would be the better choice, since it could serve—with a change of blouses (some washable cottons or silks and a couple of sweaters)—as your impeccably correct "basic" street dress throughout the visit.

In addition, you should have at least one, and preferably two, washable silk or cotton dresses for morning wear (the kind advertised for southern resort or cruise or country club wear)—and you should check with your beau as to whether you will need an evening dress. If there is a chance that you may be feted while there, take an all-purpose kind of evening dress. It might be a "dinner dress," which has long sleeves and high neck; or an evening dress with a jacket which transforms it into a dinner dress; or an "informal party" dress, which is to say—one with short sleeves and modestly cut neckline. And with the evening dress, you would need a wrap, of course. You will need sufficient lingerie, hosiery, handkerchiefs, etc., etc., to be spared the necessity of doing "light laundering" of any kind in your hostesses' bathroom during your stay.

With your suit or traveling dress you should wear a "casual" hat—not a be-ribboned, be-flowered or veil-draped confection. Your whole appearance should be somewhat suggestive of "college girl home for the weekend," or "in town for a holiday." It should be a happy medium between softly tailored and spectator sports. The effect shouldn't be starchily new or reminiscent of "bravely dressed in Sunday best."

Now, for your other questions: The correct time to visit your fiance's parents is not to be decided in terms of "now or later." The correct time to go is when you have been invited by the boy's mother for a specific date. It is for her to indicate whether she wants you for a day or week-end. If she is a kindly person, informed on the social amenities, she will write to you—either directly or in a note inclosed in a letter to her son—asking when you can come; if such-and-such a date is convenient; and if not, requesting you to suggest an alternate time. When you are going to her home, to be her guest at her invitation, because you are her son's betrothed, it will be altogether proper for you to make the five hours' bus trip in her son's company.

A gift for the boy's mother on arrival isn't necessary. It might delight her, of course; or it might embarrass her. But since it isn't a customary gesture between persons meeting for the first time, I think you might better wait until you know her. Then, you might bring her a bouquet from down town while you are there. Or give her a box of candy just as you are saying goodby. Or send her a book or a box of handkerchiefs or a piece of fine needlework (or whatever you think she would most enjoy) after you are home from the visit.

How to act? In a manner that conveys your sincere desire to please her (don't try to impress her!) in a quiet, appreciative, thoughtful, courteous manner. Be simply and honestly spoken. If you find yourself choking with nervous fright, on meeting her, don't try to brazen it out with a strangled sort of flippancy. Just take a deep breath and let her help you over the bad moment. I am sure she will like you better for being a scared, unworldly youngster than she would if you were to saunter into her life with an air of arrogant, all-knowing self-assurance. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Hagner-Stillwell Parties Hold Social Spotlight

By Hope Ridings Miller.

TAKING OVER most of the social spotlight from now until they walk down the wedding aisle on Friday afternoon will be Miss Louise Stillwell and Randall H. Hagner, jr., who are being widely feted.

Starting the ball rolling on the final round of parties for the couple, Mr. and Mrs. George Y. Wheeler 2nd, entertained at a cocktail party yesterday afternoon, having among their guests members of the wedding party and a few other close friends of Miss Stillwell and her fiance.

Hope Ridings Miller

In case you don't know exactly who the attendants will be, here's the entire bridal party. Mrs. F. Moran McConihe, the former Marguerite Hagner, will be matron of honor, and Miss Isabella Hagner will be maid of honor. Miss Elaine Darlington, Miss Sita Finkenstaedt and Miss Margaret Houghteling will be bridesmaids.

The ceremony will take place at the Argentine Embassy and will be witnessed only by members of the immediate families, the embassy staff and a few very close friends. Additional guests will come in for the reception.

Scheduled as a fete for Miss Stillwell and Mr. Hagner this afternoon is the cocktail party to be given by a group of 15 young men who term themselves "The Coelebs." The fete will take place at the home of Sam Biddle, and the list of hosts will include Tinsley Adams, Charles McKenney, John Hamilton, Malvern Morse, Grant Boss, A. Britton Browne, George Wheeler, Ord and Murray Preston, Frank Hamilton, of Cincinnati, and Gordon Brown, of Buffalo.

Mrs. Drake Gives Luncheon

"Bundling" for Britain and Red Cross bandage rolling are having quite a telling effect on Washington's social calendar these days. Ladies who formerly lingered over after-luncheon coffee cups for a dash of extra-special gossip just can't find the time to do it any more. There are too many other claims on time.

For example, after the luncheon given by Mrs. Charles B. Drake yesterday, two or three guests at least—maybe more—tore off to the Bundles for Britain headquarters, and one or two others arrived at the party practically breathless after working at the Red Cross all morning. The party, I might add right here, was one of the pleasantly informal interludes that happen all too rarely in Washington. From what I gathered in table talk, several persons had been full of good works during the morning, and others were to go on to do their bit later, but for the time being, all that apparently was forgotten . . . and the luncheon moved merrily along.

Mme. Ertegun was ranking guest in the company of 12. Mme. Fotich, whose trim, black ensemble was set off with a becoming petal-pink turban, and Mme. Hassan, chic in all-black, were there also, as was pretty Mrs. H. F. G. Letson, wife of the Canadian Military Attache, whom I hadn't met before . . . but liked, right off the bat.

Mrs. James H. Hughes was among those present, as was Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, who kept the company highly entertained with a lively series of stories collected on her recent trip to Mexico. Still others there were Lady Broderick, Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, Mrs. Fred Britten and Mrs. Carlos Del Mar.

Noted Physician Is Feted

DR. FOSTER KENNEDY, famous Irish-born neurologist, and Mrs. Kennedy, who have made their home in New York for a number of years, centered the spotlight last night when Edward Weintal gathered in a few friends. "It's not a party," said the host, "but just a few people in for a drink after dinner." Among those who dropped in were Lady Gainsborough, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Cumming, Anthony Balasy, Robin Pell, Denys Smith and Rafal Lepkowski, with whom Mr. Weintal shares an apartment. Dr. and Mrs. Kennedy are staying at the Mayflower.

CAPITAL CALENDAR: Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney will entertain at dinner before the opening of the National Art Gallery Monday night . . . Princess Boncompagni has invitations out for a dinner at the Sulgrave Club on March 20 . . . Mrs. Sidney Cloman and Mrs. Clifton Phillips will entertain at a cocktail party next Tuesday afternoon . . . Mr. and Mrs. Kleijn Molekamp have asked a few friends in for cocktails on Saturday afternoon.

MISS CAROLINE ELSA WICKETT

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Andrew Wickett, of New York City and Palo Alto, Calif., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Caroline Elsa Wickett, to James George Dern, of New York, son of Mrs. George Henry Dern, of Washington, and the late Mr. Dern, former Secretary of War and Governor of Utah.

Mr. Dern attended Dartmouth College and is a graduate of George Washington University. He is the brother of Mrs. Herbert F. Goodrich, of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia; John Dern, of Chicago, and Miss Elizabeth Dern and William B. Dern, of Washington.

The weding is planned for this summer at the California home of Mr. and Mrs. Wickett. The couple will live in New York, where Mr. Dern is with Dillon, Read & Co., investment bankers.

Dempseys Give Cocktail Party

Small and gaily informal was the cocktail party yesterday afternoon at which Maritime Commissioner and Mrs. John J. Dempsey entertained a few friends in their apartment at the Shoreham.

The hostess, who received wherever she happened to be when the guests arrived, wore a frock of chartreuse crepe made on simple lines. Spring blossoms decorated the living room where the company gathered after 5 o'clock and lingered until dinner time.

Among those present were Senator and Mrs. Robert La Follette, Senator and Mrs. Homer Bone, Representative and Mrs. Fritz Lanham, and Representative and Mrs. Ewing Thomason.

Special center of attraction was Mme. Germaine Goeury, attractive Frenchwoman, who came to Washington a few days ago for a brief stay and will return to New York today. Other guests included Representative William Barry, George Abell, Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn Waltman, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sherrod and Mr. and Mrs. Walker Stone.

Junior Leaguers Discuss Welfare Work at Tea

Mrs. Merrill G. Beede and Mrs. E. E. Colladay were hostesses at the first committee tea of the year at the Junior League headquarters on Massachusetts Avenue yesterday afternoon.

The Junior League girls met to discuss their welfare work at the Self-Help Exchange, the Juvenile Court, the Washington Housing Committee, the Criminal Justice Court and the Corcoran Art Gallery.

The members of Mrs. Beede's publicity committee talked over the plans for the annual horse show the Junior League will hold on May 16, 17 and 18.

Those present at the tea included Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr., Miss Nan Ferguson, Miss Elizabeth Sladen, Mrs. Marshall Diggs, Mrs. Edwin Tribble, Miss Martha Wilson, Mrs. Walter Boyd, Mrs. Thatcher Winslow, Mrs. John L. Lasky, Mrs. S. T. Ansell, jr., and Mrs. Richard Underwood.

Mrs. E. A. St. John To Give Luncheon

Mrs. Edward Atkins St. John will entertain at a luncheon tomorrow at the Shoreham in honor of Mrs. James Shackelford Hines, of San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Hines are stopping at the Carlton.

Mrs. St. John has come to Washington from New York and has taken an apartment at 2501 Calvert Street for several months. As Mrs. Clement Evans Dunbar she was well known here, where she formerly made her home.

Hunt Country Awaits Envoy

Expected to arrive in Washington either today or tomorrow is the new Canadian Minister, Leighton McCarthy, who promises to add more than a fillip of interest to the local scene. Friends of the envoy say that despite his 71 years, he adheres to a strenuous schedule—one, in fact, that would exhaust most men 20 years younger—and that he is quite a sportsman.

Hunt country residents have high hopes that the Minister will take some time off from affairs of state now and then to join them in riding to the hounds. Reports have already reached these parts that Mr. McCarthy is one of the outstanding members of the Toronto Hunt Club and that hunting and riding are among his favorite recreations.

Mrs. McCarthy will not accompany her husband to Washington, but she may come down later. Arriving with the new Minister will be Mr. and Mrs. Humer Wrong, the former of whom served as charge de-affaires here some time ago and more recently as resident Canadian delegate at the League of Nations. He is returning here as senior counselor.

Historic Buildings Will Be Visited

Sixteen private houses, an old church, an old apothecary shop and a famous tavern will open hospitable doors on Saturday, April 19, from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m. when the Alexandria Association sponsors the eighth annual tour of old and historic houses. Tea will be served at Gadsby's Tavern to the accompaniment of Negro spirituals sung by the Sabbath Glee Club of Richmond. A replica of Gen. Washington's coach will parade the streets. Funds earned will go to preserve American landmarks.

Mrs. Pinchot To Entertain Shop Group

Tomorrow morning Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, chairman of the Antique Shop committee of the Piccadilly Arcade, will gather her coworkers at her home on Rhode Island Avenue. Already many interesting items have been collected for that shop, and Mrs. Breckenridge Long, the vice chairman, is busy every moment with the contributions pouring in.

Among those who will attend will be Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mrs. Alan Kirk, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Mrs. Vera Bloom, Mrs. J. H. B. Gilliat, Mrs. Albert B. Dewey, Mrs. Arthur Woods, Mrs. Frederic A. Keep, Mrs. Oscar L. Chapman, Mrs. Claude Pepper, Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, Mrs. R. L. Ragg, Mrs. Walter Lippmann, Mrs. Mason Hurwitz, Mrs. John M. Coffee and Mrs. Robert Stewart-Richardson.

McNary, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mrs. Clarence Lee Miller, Mrs. John L. Lewis and Mrs. D. F. Anderson.

Mrs. Forrestal Gives Luncheon

Yesterday Mrs. James V. Forrestal entertained at luncheon for her committee, the Flower Shop Committee of the Piccadilly Arcade. Among the special guests who attended was Mrs. William Fiske, who came up especially for the event from Mrs. Whitney's lovely estate, Llangollen, in Upperville, Va. Mrs. Fiske has made her home there since her arrival in this country following the death of her husband, who was one of the first American aviator casualties in the present war.

Others who attended Mrs. Forrestal's luncheon included Mrs. Robert A. Lovett, vice chairman; Mrs. Pearsons Rust, Mrs. Eugene Carusi, Mrs. Robert P. Patterson, Mrs. John Towers, Mrs. Kenneth Jenkins, Mrs. William Street, Mrs. Randall Hagner, Mrs. Moran McConihe, Countess Di Zoppoli, Mrs. John Gingrich and Mrs. John Biggers.

Among those who attended were Mrs. R. Keith Kane, vice chairman of the committee; Mrs. Richard Faralley, Mrs. Benjamin F. Jones, Mr. Walter Boyd, Mrs. Frederick M. Bradley, Mrs. Charles W. Flaggs to Visit Admiral Butler At Virginia Home

Commander and Mrs. Allan P. Flagg will leave Washington in the next day or so for a visit with Rear Admiral and Mrs. Henry Varnum Butler, at their home, Belle Meade, near Front Royal, Va.

On Monday or Tuesday of next week the Flaggs and their 2-year-old son, Henry Varnum Butler Flagg, will be off on the long trek to the West Coast. Commander Flagg, who has been on duty here for the last year, has been transferred to the Naval Air Station at Sand Point, Seattle, Wash., where he will be executive officer.

Commander and Mrs. Flagg were married five years ago on the West Coast, where he was on duty and where Mrs. Flagg's grandfather, Admiral Butler, was in command of the Battle Force Aircraft Squadron. Shortly after that they came to duty at the Naval Air Station in Anacostia. Mrs. Flagg made her debut here in 1933.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards Wedded 43 Years

Real shamrocks, straight from Ireland, will adorn the wedding anniversary cake for Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Richards, who will have been married 43 years on March 17.

A celebration is being planned for that day, to take place at the Richards home, 719 South Patrick Street, Alexandria, Va. Mr. and Mrs. Richards were married at Rockville, Md., on St. Patrick's Day, 1898.

Capital Whirl

By Sally Swift

NEW YORK having given its quota of attractive women to Washington society this winter, Boston is now looking to its laurels in the persons of Mrs. Shaw Parker and Mrs. Morgan Hallowell, both of them tall, blond and beautiful. Mrs. Hallowell is engaged to Ronald Lyman, also of Boston, who is stationed here as an officer of the Marine Corps, and their marriage will take place in the late spring or early summer. Mr. Lyman is a cousin of Chauncey and Cortlandt Parker and of Mrs. George Howe, and is well acquainted with the Capital. So he is showing his fiancee around the town during her present visit with some house-hunting thrown in.

The only part of Washington which he can't show her, because she knows it very well, is the White House. Mrs. Hallowell, as the former Olivia Morgan, was a classmate of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., and a favorite guest at all the young people's parties at the White House. She was also one of the bevy of beauties who were bridesmaids at the duPont-Roosevelt wedding.

MRS. Hallowell and Mr. Lyman lunched informally at the White House the other day with the Franklin Roosevelts jr. just before their hosts left for New York. Young John Roosevelts were also present at the luncheon, as were the former Ambassador, William C. Bullitt, whose conversation held the junior members of the party spellbound.

SITTING IN FRONT of the fire in Mrs. Shaw Parker's small, modern house in Georgetown is like being out of doors with all the comforts of home. One whole wall of her living room is a huge window which looks over a flagstoned terrace to the garden beyond. Watching the firelight reflected on the window-wall while snow or rain pours down outside the glass barrier is an experience in itself. Other interesting features of Mrs. Parker's home are a semicircular staircase, a curved, built-in bookcase and much wood paneling used in the modern manner.

Mrs. Parker asked a few friends in the other evening to meet her house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander James, of Dublin, N. H. Mr. James is in Washington in connection with the Corcoran Art Gallery's forthcoming exhibition of the work of modern American artists. Among those dining with Mrs. Parker or coming in later to meet Mr. and Mrs. James were Mrs. Edmund W. Pavenstedt, Mrs. Anthony Crossley, John Foster, of the British Embassy, Mrs. Anthony Coleby, Dick Sears of Boston, Theodore Rousseau and Eric Taff.

THE MINISTER of Czecho-Slovakia and Madame Hurban have returned from a short vacation in Florida. The Hurbans cut their vacation short so that Madame Hurban could begin work in preparation for the Czech bagaar, which will be held at the British War relief headquarters next week. It seems that the current Greek bazaar at the British War Relief is going very well, with reorders on many of the objects for sale. The Czech ladies hope to have an equal success and are choosing quite a different line of goods for their bazaar. They lean very much to useful and simple things, such as knitted boots, caps and sweaters for babies, covered dress-hangers and knitting bags. Many of these are made by the ladies of the local Czech colony and they are also preparing some special Czech dainties, cakes and cookies. Madame Hurban has found some pieces of Czech glass which has now become so very rare as to be almost historic. A dealer in Cuba has some of this beautiful glassware left and has brought it as far as New York, whence he shipped it to the bazaar.

Ciechanowskis Will Be Feted

The new Ambassador from Poland and Mme. Ciechanowska will be among the dinner guests of Baron and Baroness von Boetzelaer of the Netherlands staff next Tuesday evening preceding the Philadelphia Orchestra concert when Eugene Ormandy will conduct and Frances Nash Watson, American pianist and popular in local society as the wife of Maj. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, will give the program.

Baron von Boetzelaer has reserved a box for this occasion and among the dinner guests, whom they will take on later to the concert, He and the Baroness also will have Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson and Mrs. Hallam Tuck, of New York City. Mrs. Tuck is coming down especially for this event. She has been a friend of Gen. and Mrs. Watson and the Von Boetzelaers since post-war days when they were all in Brussels, Belgium.

Another gay dinner party planned to precede the concert will be that of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Woodward, who will have as their guests Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, and Mr. and Mrs. William Adams Delano. Mr. Delano is the New York architect. He and Mrs. Delano are among a large number from out of town who will come here for the opening of the new Mellon Gallery of Art and stay over for the concert Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Denegre Gives Dinner

The Belgian Ambassador, Count van der Straten-Ponthoz, was ranking guest at the dinner given last evening by Mrs. Walter Denegre at her home on Sixteenth Street.

Assisting Mrs. Bowen will be Mrs. Seth Williams, Mrs. W. H. Shea and Mrs. Felix Gygax. Hostesses for the day will be Mrs. Harold Holcomb, Mrs. James Maher, Mrs. Morton Deyo, Mrs. Francis Whitaker, Mrs. Frank Beatty, Mrs. Edward Cochrane, Mrs. Francis Cabell Brown, Mrs. Curtis Shears, Mrs. Ralph Riggs, Mrs. Harold Biesemeier, Mrs. Joseph Fellows, Mrs. T. Women's Press Club Hears William Bullitt

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor

Food for France and defense for America were urged by former Ambassador William C. Bullitt yesterday in a talk before the Women's National Press Club at the Willard Hotel. Reiterating his frequent assertion of the imperative need for both, Mr. Bullitt expressed hope that some plan would be worked out for sending supplies to the unoccupied area of France and that the American people would arouse themselves from confidence in the Atlantic Ocean similar to that of the French a few months ago in the Maginot Line.

The demarcation between occupied and unoccupied France is definite, he said. Whereas, in the occupied area, an influx of supplies for the civilian population would mean a heavier drain on the country's own resources by the Germans, this would not be the case in unoccupied France. There are no Germans in this area and the supplies would be distributed by American relief agencies directly to the civilians, he said.

Great Britain's willingness to examine plans for sending the supplies, and French funds here which could be released to pay for the food, offer the hope of a solution, he stated. To deny food to the French would be playing the Germans game, causing a starving people to turn against a former ally although now 95 per cent of the French hope and pray for a British victory, he declared.

Answering a question as to what he considered a serious threat to the United States, Mr. Bullitt mentioned first the possibility of this country having to defend two oceans with a "one-ocean navy" if the British fleet were not on the Atlantic. Were the British fleet eliminated, he continued, totalitarian elements in certain South American countries would strike for power and then probably invite the Nazis to organize their armies. This would mean a considerable area of South America under totalitarian domination and cooperation not with the United States but with the totalitarian nations. Economic necessity is the club being held against our good neighbor policy, he said.

Mr. Bullitt was introduced by Mrs. J. Fred Essary, president of the club.

Among the guests at the head table was Barbro Alving, distinguished Swedish war correspondent, who is here on her way from Sweden to England to cover her fourth war. Representing the Swedish paper, Dagens Nyheter, Mrs. Alving was in Spain during the revolution, in Finland during its defense against the Russians and in Norway at the time of the German invasion. She was present when Finland's retiring President Kallio died on the station platform when he was being honored as he prepared to leave Helsinki. She covered the meeting of Hitler and Chamberlain at Godesberg; the coronation of King George; the wedding of Crown Princess Juliana; "Munich" and the invasion of Czecho-Slovakia.

Her war assignments have made her unpopular with the Germans and Russians and, unable to obtain a visa from either, she is now on her way to England via Finland and the United States.

Among other guests were Frances Nash Watson, wife of Gen. Edwin Watson, Aide to the President; Loy Henderson, secretary of the United States Embassy in Russia while Mr. Bullitt was Ambassador there; Mrs. Henderson, Mrs. Frederick Sterling, wife of the United States Minister to Sweden; Lynch Luquer, president of the Alliance Francaise; Mrs. Charles Lea and Guy Gannett, Maine newspaper publisher.

Park View Club Hears Hancock

The life of women of Central America was described by Ralph Hancock, for seven years a newspaper correspondent there, in a talk last night before the Park View Woman's Club. Mr. Hancock showed pictures at the meeting, in the home of Mrs. C. B. Scott, 3813 Fifth Street.

Women in the Central American countries have small cultural clubs, but no large and influential organizations such as those in the United States, he said. In this respect they are about at the stage of progress the North American woman was at the turn of the century, he said.

North American movies are popular with the women there, not only as entertainment but as a source of inspiration for their clothes, he said. Fashions are set by Hollywood.

Police to Quiz All Residents Of Apartment

Detectives last night turned to the task of questioning all residents of the apartment house where Mrs. Rose Simons Abramowitz, 29, was slain Saturday, hoping for a single new fact to aid in unraveling the mystery.

Most of yesterday was spent by detectives running down "promising information" turned over to them by a Washington attorney. Police hopes for a break were blasted when the information turned out to be worthless.

The lawyer told police Monday night that one of his clients, a woman, came to him after seeing a picture of one of the residents of the apartment building at 1901 Sixteenth Street Northwest. She said the picture resembled a man who had been pursuing her.

The woman, who lives in an apartment less than a block from the Abramowitz home, agreed to view the man in a police line-up.

Questioned at Length

Detectives apprehended him about noon yesterday and took him to a precinct station. He was not booked, though he was questioned at length.

Finally, investigators arranged for a lineup with other prisoners at the station house. The woman failed to identify him. He was released.

Meanwhile, Hugh Stephens, 17-year-old Central High School student, who lives in an apartment directly under the Abramowitz flat, was called to Police Headquarters yesterday to give a written account of what he saw and heard Saturday between 10 a. m. and 1:30 p. m. when the young bride was strangled.

Detective Lieut. George Darnall, chief of the homicide squad, said he intended to have every person in the building Saturday morning submit a written statement.

Method of Entrance a Puzzle

At the same time Detective Sergt. Aubrey M. Tolson, who was sent to Kansas City, Mrs. Abramowitz home town, was checking on a man who was said to have frequented the apartment house. Police learned of the man from a woman resident of the building who said she knew he was from Kansas City and that she had seen him in the building several times.

Still a puzzle to police was the method of entrance used by the strangler. The dead woman's husband, Barney Abramowitz, 33, an attorney at the Social Security Board, said she never removed the night chain from the door of the apartment while home alone.

He said she had few friends in the city and that he did not think she would admit strangers.

It was also disclosed yesterday that Mrs. Abramowitz had gone to the lobby of the apartment for mail sometime around 9 a. m., after her husband left for the office. This was ascertained by the fact that two letters, which had been opened, were found in the apartment.

Saw Letters in Box

Abramowitz said the letters were in the mail box when he went to work.

Police at first believed Mrs. Abramowitz's attacker had followed her from the first-floor corridor and forced himself into her apartment when she opened the door. This was discounted later, however, because the letters had been cut open in a fashion always employed by Mrs. Abramowitz. It was said by investigators that the intruder hardly would have allowed her to read her mail before attacking her.

William J. Ely, colored, 36, who shoveled snow at the apartment house the morning of the slaying, was still held by police last night. Investigators said they wanted to check thoroughly certain of his statements.

Dauntless Spirit of British Stops Hitler, Editor Tells Circle

Adolf Hitler would today be the master of Great Britain if it were not for the dauntless spirit of the English people, Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of The Washington Post, yesterday told members of the Hebrew Sisters Aid Circle at the Shoreham Hotel.

He praised the organization for its 20 years of work to relieve suffering, adding:

"It is your type of spirit which is necessary to our own defense. We must practice the principles of right living which Hitler is out to destroy and it is work of your kind which is helping us."

Meyer spoke at the group's ninth annual donor luncheon, attended by nearly 400 volunteer women welfare workers.

Mrs. Simon Davis, chairman of the luncheon committee, reported that Aid Circle rummage sales, card parties and other activities had in recent months netted $3,000 for needy families of the District.

Opening the meeting, Mrs. Joseph Cherner, president of the circle, praised the members for "unselfish and untiring" efforts.

"You have brought sunshine to those in darkness," she said. "Every penny you have brought in has gone to aid those less fortunate; to bring cheer and hope from the depths of despair."

For special commendation, Mrs. Cherner cited Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Meyer Berman, treasurer of the rummage sales; Mrs. William Levy, chairman of hostesses, and Mrs. Harry Sheftell, Mrs. B. Levine and Mrs. Sam Schlosky, members of the rummage committee.

Meyer described activities of the Axis powers as a direct denial of God.

"Evil hands," he said, "have been laid on standards and values which have taken years to achieve. Nothing is sacred to those who have deliberately set about to destroy the world."

The meeting concluded with violin selections by Theodore Podnos, of the National Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Theodore Garcia, assistant conductor of the orchestra, and vocal selections by Mrs. Lillian Albert Shklar, accompanied by Miss Nettie Sadle.

Two Bandits Get $146 in Holdup At Liquor Store

Allan Jeweler, 24-year-old liquor store proprietor, was robbed of $176 last night by two white men.

The robbery followed by only three day an attack upon his uncle, William Jeweler, proprietor of the Columbia Beverage Shop at 3910 Fourteenth Street Northwest, who was badly beaten and robbed of $600 by three thugs who ambushed him on his way home.

Jeweler, who lives at 1315 Fern Street Northwest, was in the liquor store, 609 Eleventh Street Southwest, with a delivery boy, Robert Locklin, colored, 24, when the gunmen entered. They rifled the cash register, which contained $50, and took his wallet, containing $126.

Cab Officers Charged With Tax Evasion

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, March 11.—Federal indictments charging three officers of the Sun Cab Co., Inc., with evasion of $267,027 in income taxes between 1934 and 1939 were returned here today by the United States grand jury.

Judge William C. Coleman issued bench warrants for arrest of Herbert Glassman, president; Edward C. Ostrow, treasurer, and Joseph I. Zucker, auditor, all of Washington, and set bail of $25,000 each for Glassman and Ostrow, and $10,000 for Zucker.

Five Federal indictments were returned against the three men, the Sun Cab Co., and the District Underwriters, Inc., which is controlled by the trio.

T. Barton Harrington, assistant United States district attorney for Maryland, explained the indictments were returned here because residents of the District of Columbia are required to file income tax reports with the Maryland internal revenue office. The Sun Cab is a Maryland corporation.

The indictments charged the cab company and officers "wilfully, knowingly and feloniously attempted to defeat and evade an income tax" by falsifying earnings.

During 1935, 1936 and 1937, the indictment charged the company's net income was $181,033 and attempted to evade $22,932 in income taxes.

Glassman was charged with evading taxes totaling $110,727 on earned net income of $438,824 for the years 1934-38. The indictment against Ostrow charged that his net earned income for the same years was $438,193, and that he evaded payment of $116,996 in taxes.

The indictment against Zucker alleged he failed to file a 1937 return on a net income of more than $2,500.

2 Die in Crash Of Naval Plane

San Diego, March 11 (AP).—Two men were killed and another bailed out safely in a crash of a naval torpedo plane, 85 miles northeast of here today.

The dead, identified by Ensign W. Glenn Barnes, who parachuted, were R. Goff, and a seaman Barnes knew only as Doga. Barnes said that after landing he walked back to the plane and found one man burned inside the craft and the other dead a few feet away. The plane was attached to the carrier Saratoga.

Solution Near in Kansas City Heiress' Murder, Police Hint

By the Associated Press

Kansas City, March 11.—One of two diaries kept by pretty Leila Adele Welsh disclosed tonight that the young heiress rejected a fervent proposal of marriage a few days before she was savagely slain and her body mutilated.

The diaries and about 50 recently received letters, some of them love letters, were studied by police seeking clews to the girl's death in her bedroom early Sunday.

An entry in the diary, authorities said, indicated Miss Welsh, 24, and the young man who proposed by mail had reached an understanding that she could not marry him.

Earlier in the day Police Chief Lear B. Reed said a definite lead had been uncovered in the case, but he declined to say when he expected an arrest.

Of more than 30 persons questioned, two remained in custody.

J. A. Purdome, chief deputy sheriff, said a youth confessed the crime and implicated an older man. The officer discounted the confession but detained the two for further investigation.

Purdome, commenting on the fact a railroad hammer, a butcher knife and a pair of cotton gloves, all blood-stained, had been left near the scene, asserted:

"It appears that the murderer took too many pains to leave obvious clews."

The girl's skull was crushed by a blow from the hammer and her throat slashed. Her pajamas were cut to shreds and a portion of her hip sliced off and left 100 yards away.

Funeral services were held today for Miss Welsh, a 1937 finalist in a Kansas City University beauty contest. Hundreds of friends as well as her mother, her brother, George, and a sister attended.

The Rev. James L. McKee, a great-uncle of the girl, conducted the service. Speaking with deep feeling and pausing occasionally to clear his throat, he said: "I do not believe this community, in its long history, has ever suffered such a terrific shock."

The girl, who shared with her brother and sister in a $200,000 trust fund, was neither robbed nor criminally attacked.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Changes Studied In Rating System

A study that may result in radical changes in the Federal employe efficiency rating system is being made by the Council of Personnel Administration, it became known last night. This was after the system was criticized at yesterday's hearing before the House Civil Service Committee on uniform promotion bills. Chairman Ramspeck said the system was "unsatisfactory," Representative Rogers, ranking Republican, denounced it as "manifestly unfair and obviously bad," and E. D. Young, Budget Bureau personnel director, testified that improvements in the system are "urgently needed." It's significant that the council is under the Civil Service Commission and the commission has authority to order revision of the system to measure the efficiency of Government workers.

Otherwise the hearings got off to a good start. Most of the committee members agreed informally that some form of uniform promotion system to cover Federal employes was sorely needed. The Budget Bureau promotion proposal was given a boost when Ramspeck announced that key members of the House appropriations committee would testify and he indicated they'd plump for the budget plan.

Representative Randolph, who is sponsoring a plan of his own which would compel Uncle Sam to raise salaries of satisfactory employes annually, said a survey he conducted revealed that the present haphazard promotion system discriminates against low-paid employes. He pointed out that 18 higher-ups are promoted for every pay raise given low salaried workers. Budget Director Harold Smith also testified that higher paid employes received most of the promotion money.

Smith told the committee that the emergency situation "calls for the highest degree of employe morale in the Government service." He said he believed that passage of the uniform promotion plan not only would bolster morale but also would cost Uncle Sam less in dollars and cents than the hit-and-miss system now in effect. Smith put his finger on another weak spot when he said that the Government is losing a number of highly competent persons because of the absence of a salary advancement plan.

J. L. Acuff, Interior employe, and Doris Merrick, RFC secretary, are winners of the Federal Employe Council-WJSV Florida contest. They'll leave Friday for a week in St. Petersburg. Miss Merrick wouldn't believe she had won and Archie Edwards, council president, had to send her a letter to verify it. To the hundreds of also-rans there's a bit of consolation in the fact that similar trips to Miami and the Great Lakes are being planned.

The Senate has passed a bill which will permit FBI to rehire its retired employes during the emergency . . . Civil Service Commission will be able to hire about 150 additional investigators with the $125,000 approved by the Senate. The Senate specified that the money was to be used "only for investigative work." At the same time it refused the commission funds to increase its clerical employes . . . Incidentally, the commission will no longer investigate the characters of persons certified to the Treasury except in case of transfer, reinstatement, or change in status. Revenue agents are investigating all Treasury employes.

Budget Bureau yesterday amended travel regulations to permit Federal employes to use either planes or trains . . . Photographing of Civil Service Commission employes was started yesterday . . . Commission officials explain that requests for transfer or reinstatement are being held up in some cases because agencies haven't sent available personnel records to the commission . . . Representative Kilburn of New York indirectly made an unwelcome suggestion yesterday at the meeting of the House Civil Service Committee. He explained that Civil Service jobs are eagerly sought after and suggested the Government may be paying high salaries . . . Fact is that only 4 per cent of Federal employes are paid $4,000 or more. The average salary is around $2,000.

President Roosevelt yesterday signed an executive order which will permit Federal employes to be transferred or to be reinstated after serving satisfactorily for six months.

Bee Spells Prizes for D. C. Secretaries

CARROLL VIGEANT, 2001 16th St. N.W., spells:

. . . "honorificabilitudinity," often referred to as the longest word in the English language

The secretary's nightmare—spelling—was made exciting and profitable for two teams each composed of ten future secretaries from the Washington and Baltimore branches of Strayer College last night as the groups matched wits and syllables in their annual spelling bee.

Washington won with 18 misspellings to Baltimore's 29, but two pretty Baltimore girls left a defeated team behind to take first and second honors in the individual contest.

Louise Byrnes, 18, of Baltimore, won the first prize of $15. Grace Koller, 17, of Baltimore, went down to the second prize of $10 on "pernicious." "Desuetude" put Katherine Kinsey, 18, of Falls Church, Va., captain of the Washington team, in third place, for $5.

Two other Washingtonians went down after two rounds in the individual finals—Raymond Parrott on "piccalilli" and Rita Murphy on "nasturtium."

One of the Washington team's favored, Carroll Vigeant, 22, of 2001 Sixteenth Street Northwest, trained on the longest word in the English language — Honorificabilitatudinatatabus, meaning honor—but was carried out on "linoleum."

The team matches went three rounds of 15 minutes each. First came the "easy" words, then harder ones, and finally what one member of the Washington team called "the stinkers."

The list of 1,000 words was compiled by Harry G. Roberts, assistant professor of public speaking at George Washington University, from words that every secretary—and everybody else—some day hopes to master.

Miss Mary E. Bontz, a teacher at the Washington College, called the words and helped out with explanations of what they meant.

Here are the words that tricked Washingtonians:

Lightning, hybrid, embarrass, masquerade, extirpate, emanate, anemometer, tessellated, indigenous, lingerie, linoleum, cocaine, deciduous and academician

Occurrence, imaginary, immediately, phantom, improvement, gelatine, salable, eightieth, parliamentary, vengeance, emulsion, cemetery, unanimous, dyspeptic, sinecure, schism, witticism, asphyxiated, forswear, paroxysm, saccharin, apropos and buffoonery.

Members of the Washington team were Katherine Kinsey, Luther Hall, Leota Kolb, Adele Langenberg, Rita Murphy, Jean Powell, Raymond Parrott, Corinne Rausch, Eleanor Royer and Carroll Vigeant.

Meetings Set On District Tax Problem

Leaders of Both Houses to Convene; Randolph Sees No Chance of Sales Levy

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

Fearing that the District may not have enough revenue to supply municipal services for a rapidly growing National Capital, the Senate and House District Committees moved yesterday to avert an emergency.

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, after a conference with Chairman Reynolds, called a meeting of his tax subcommittee for 11 o'clock tomorrow to act on the Overton fiscal formula. The formula would raise the Federal payment from $6,000,000 to $9,000,000.

At the same time Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, and Representative Hunter, chairman of the fiscal relations subcommittee, arranged tentatively for a conference Tuesday with District officials.

Situation Serious

"The fiscal situation of the District is getting serious as a result of the inrush of defense employes," Hunter said. "Millions of dollars more in revenue will have to be found within the next year or so if proper municipal facilities are to be provided for the new residents."

Representative Randolph abandoned any idea of reviving a sales tax this year.

"Due to the failure of the income tax amendments to pass the House," Randolph said, "discussion has turned again to the possibility of enactment of a sales tax for the District, along with other forms of possible revenue sources.

"It is my opinion that Congress would quickly and firmly turn its back on the sales tax proposal.

"For many years it has been my belief that this form of tax was particularly workable and meritorious for Washington. It would be futile, however, even if such a tax could be reported by the District Committee, to bring it to the House. Scores of members have told me they would not allow such a measure to pass.

A Tangled Web

"The problem is more perplexing than it has been in years. Of course, the District Committee will attempt to aid in the solution of the tangled tax web."

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, and other members of the House fiscal affairs subcommittee, will be invited to participate in the Tuesday conference.

"Our purpose will be to review the whole picture of how much money the District will need as a result of the defense expansion and what sources of revenue can be tapped," said Hunter.

Senator Overton hopes to have the revised land-ratio fiscal formula approved by his subcommittee so that it may be reported promptly to the full committee. No more hearings will be held as adequate testimoney was taken two years ago.

Senator Reynolds said he considers the financial needs of the National Capital urgent in view of the fact that the national defense program centers in Washington.

"Our national defense must not be crippled by the lack of a few paltry dollars to run the greatest capital of the greatest nation on earth," he said.

"I believe that the Overton formula is a sound basis on which to start consideration of a program to provide this great city with the funds needed to keep it the greatest city in the world."

New Traffic Lights Asked by Benning Unit

The Benning Citizens Association last night asked the installation of street lights on Baker Street between Thirty-third and Thirty-fifth Streets Northeast and on Blaine Street between Forty-first Street and Anacostia Road Northeast.

Meeting at the Benning School, the association also requested the installation of storm sewers and fire boxes at River Terrace.

As an indication of the growth in population in the area in the last year, the association pointed out that attendance at the Benning School has leaped from 145 to 308 in a year.

Eight Fire Engines Rush to Trash Blaze

A sack of trash caught fire in a basement corridor of the Commerce Department Building shortly after 9:30 last night, bringing eight pieces of apparatus to the scene at Fourteenth and Constitution Avenue.

Firemen connected hose to fireplugs, only to learn the blaze had been extinguished by guards. The trash was left in the corridor by a charwoman.

Sailors rushed to battle stations. Officers barked commands. A buzzer sounded and a four-inch gun hurled a shell, in theory at least, at "an approaching enemy ship."

The action took place during a battle problem enacted last night by 150 officers and men of the First and Second Divisions of Washington's Naval Reserve Battalion at Naval Reserve Armory, Eleventh and M Streets Southeast, now in gala full dress regalia with pennants and bunting celebrating Naval Reserve Week.

A crowd of close to 500 jammed the small armory to watch the bluejackets go through their paces ranging from knot-tieing to the maneuver of abandoning ship.

Under the scrutiny of Lieut. W. Croft Jennings, U. S. N. R., battalion commander, and Lieut. (j. g.) Bert Lindman, the Reservists, one by one, snapped through the manual of arms as the officers inspected equipment and general appearance of each.

The sailors then broke ranks, each to perform his own particular role in the seemingly automatic fire, collision and abandon ship maneuvers.

Broadcast over a local radio hookup, the battle problem represented the activities of a modern destroyer on wartime patrol duty when an enemy craft is sighted.

Frank Bridge's Music Heard As Memorial

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress presents on Tuesday night a memorial concert of music by Frank Bridge. Artists: The Coolidge Quartet (William Kroll, Jack Pepper, Nicolas Moldaven and Victor Gottlieb), Rebecca Clarke, viola; Sterling Hunkins, violoncello; Frank Sheridan, piano. Program: String Quartet in G minor (1915), Sonata for violin and piano (1932), Sextet for strings (1920).

In the auditorium where the late Frank Bridge received the Coolidge Medal for eminent services to chamber music on October 30, 1938, his memory was honored last evening by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress with a concert consisting of three of his compositions. Just two months previously, on January 11, the distinguished composer and conductor had died in his home at Eastbourne, England, from a heart attack, at the age of 61. The memorial was appropriate both as a personal tribute and as a recognition of exceptional merit, for Bridge shared with John Ireland and Arnold Bax the distinction of raising the modern standard of English chamber music.

BROWN

While Bridge composed in many forms, he showed a marked preference for chamber music as a medium of expression. His penchant for that type of writing probably arose from his experience as a quartet player. He began as a violinist in the Grimson Quartet, and in 1906 succeeded Wirth as viola player in the Joachim Quartet, remaining with that organization until 1915. He also played viola in the English Quartet with Thomas Morris, Herbert Kinsey and Ivor James, a group which disbanded in 1925.

As a composer Bridge kept abreast of his time, a fact which was illustrated by the works played last night. Broadminded in his attitude toward innovation, he was an electic who could be in turn romantic or modern in the harmonic sense. His string quartet in G minor, dated 1915, is an interesting mixture of the two tendencies. Its thematic material is definitely romantic, particularly in the questioning theme which dominates the second movement, while the harmonic texture is piquant with passing dissonances.

The sonata for violin and piano, splendidly played by William Kroll and Frank Sheridan, is melodically unprepossessing, stark in structure and acrid in harmonies. Yet this work, written in 1932, leaves the impression of a strong personality and a keen intellect. As the players neared the end of the sonata, a blown fuse extinguished the lights of the stage for several moments, but did not stop the performance. The musicians are to be congratulated on their aplomb and their memories, for this music must be as hard to read and to remember as a page of "Finnegan's Wake."

The sextet for strings (1920), in which the Coolidge Quartet was joined by Rebecca Clarke and Sterling Hunkins, is a rich and rewarding work in the true romantic style made pungent by a dash of modernism. The music is robust and glowing with poesy, imaginative and woven of fertile melodic ideas. The second movement, characterized by a recurrent drooping theme, is the most attractive.

Trip Winner Hopes to See Lots in Florida

Yachting parties, fishing expeditions and free use of all the sports and recreational facilities of St. Petersburg, Fla., will be waiting for John L. Acuff next week, but what he wants most to see in the sunshine city are two ordinary, vacant lots.

Acuff, a 44-year-old Interior Department classification examiner, was one of two winners of a Federal Employes Council contest. A week's vacation in Florida was the prize, and the city of St. Petersburg will be his host. Last night, in ceremonies broadcast over Station WJSV, he received his railroad ticket for the Silver Meteor Friday.

In St. Petersburg he will be greeted by the mayor and president of the Chamber of Commerce. The New York Yankees and the St. Louis Cardinals are training there and Acuff is a baseball fan. Free tickets will be his for the asking. But he is not going to ask until he sees those two vacant lots.

"You see," he explained last night, "I own those lots. I bought them in 1930. But I've never seen them. All I can say is, I hope they're not under water."

Acuff, who lives in Bethesda, Md., with his wife and two sons, 9 and 3, said that he hopes to build a home on one of those lots and sell the other when he retires.

Acuff suggested a central recreational program and plant for all Government workers when the F. E. C. ran a contest in search of ideas for improving Washington's recreational program.

Doris Merrick, 38-year-old Reconstruction Finance Corporation secretary, was the second winner of the contest. Her suggestion was similar to Acuff's and she will receive the same prize.

Miss Merrick, who lives at 3741 Kanawha Street Northwest, flew to Minnesota, Monday, because of a death in her family and could not attend last night's radio program. But she is expected to return in time to make the Silver Meteor at 7:45 p. m. Friday.

Bar to Open Its Library To Colored

D. C. Association Reverses Previous Action and Adopts By-Law Amendment

The Bar Association of the District of Columbia last night reversed its previous action and adopted an amendment to its by-laws to permit colored members of the bar to use its library in the Courthouse—an amendment around which controversy has centered for months.

After a stormy session, the amendment was approved by the close vote of 118 to 54—just above the two-thirds required.

The amendment provides that members of the bar may be granted library privileges on payment of $8 a year. Since Attorney General Robert H. Jackson has issued an order that on and after April 1 library space in the Courthouse shall be made available to all members of the bar in good standing, next step in the negotiations will be this offer by the association with the fee requirement.

During the long debate, several speakers favoring the amendment pointed out that after April 1 the library might be homeless or in storage, pending the possible negotiations for purchasing a building for the association.

Paul E. Lesh, who proposed the amendment, urged members "not to act selfishly" and not to become "a private club" in taking steps to remove its library from the present convenient location.

4 Sites Under Consideration

John K. Cunningham, secretary of the committee on a new building for the association, reported that four sites are now under consideration, and said the committee considered the acquiring of a building as "entirely feasible." He mentioned tentative prices ranging from $85,000 to $150,000.

Several members, including Paul Hannah, Phillip W. Austin and Louis Arnold, cautioned against the association undertaking such a burden.

"You're trying to go into a proposal way over your head," Arnold declared. Austin said such a venture would result in reduced membership. Hannah pointed out that larger associations in other cities found it impracticable to buy a building.

In his address Lesh said the Bar Association library had been in the courthouse for 66 years, and that the books are now housed without cost. Aside from the convenience of their location to the association's own members, he said, the library renders a service to the courts. One of the judges said, "We need these books more than you boys do," Lesh said.

"We are going to lose part of our prestige if we remove our library and cease to render this service to the courts," he added.

Public Library Costly

"What a time to make an issue of this! Our judges are overworking to keep up and we would take this time to withdraw one element of our cooperation."

Lesh pointed out further that it would cost the Government perhaps $100,000 to establish a public law library there, and that he was unwilling to add that burden at a time when national defense costs are mounting.

"Let's make the Attorney General a fair offer. A fair offer is likely to be accepted," Lesh concluded.

Richard L. Merrick, the next speaker, said "I don't want to be coerced into something I didn't intend to do in the first place . . . I don't think it is dignified for the association to get on its knees and submit an offer, when we've practically been told to get out or submit."

An amendment, substantially the same as the one adopted last night, was rejected by the association at the December meeting, and was debated heatedly at several other meetings.

Among other action taken at the meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, the association approved in principle "a suitable retirement provision with proper emolument" for judges of Municipal Court, Police Court and Juvenile Court.

It approved in principle the proposed bill for construction of a stadium in the District, and also in principle the bill to prevent unauthorized practice of law before Government departments, commissions, bureaus and agencies.

Stanton Park Group Praises Keech's Action

The Stanton Park Citizens Association last night commended the work of Corporation Counsel Raymond B. Keech in the Buckley case.

Keech, the resolution said, "promptly reopened" the case after The Post disclosed that M. Edward Buckley, jr., Washington attorney, was fined for driving on the wrong side of the street after an original charge of driving while drunk was nolle prossed without the appearance of witnesses.

The association met at the Peabody School and discussed the current proposals for rent regulation in the District. The matter was referred to the law and legislation committee.

A letter was dispatched to the Capital Transit Co. protesting against what members said was a "common practice" of changing the destination of buses and cars along the route. Eleven new members were admitted to the association.

D. C. Teacher On Way to Get Pilot's Wings

HELEN HERFURTH

Miss Helen Herfurth, a teacher at the Anacostia Junior-Senior High School, was on the way to getting her wings yesterday with the completion of her ground school course and the award of a flight training scholarship under the civilian pilot training program.

Miss Herfurth said she had "been up only twice" before she started her ground school training in mid-November of last year.

"I'd like to use my license if I get it to some advantage," she said. More women should take up flying, she believes. In case men are needed for military service in the air, women should be trained to take over their jobs in commercial aviation, she said.

She is a native of Washington and a graduate of Wilson Teachers' College. Her home is at 3422 Garfield Street Northwest.

Her pilot training will begin soon at Beacon Airport near Alexandria, Va.

Citizens Urge Stanton School Modernization

Modernization and expansion of Stanton Elementary School was urged last night at a meeting of the Summit Park Citizens Association.

Mrs. Leila Marshall, who offered the resolution declared four new classrooms were needed and asked for any repairs necessary to put the outmoded building into good shape.

In another move bearing on education, President James Davis appointed William J. Smith chairman of a committee to investigate the question of nonresident attendance at already overcrowded local schools.

Members also urged establishment of benches along the riverfront in Anacostia Parkway.

Logan-Thomas Circle

Establishment of a "rent commission" to hold down rents in the face of a threatened housing shortage was urged for the District last night at the annual dinner-meeting of the Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association.

The citizens also suggested elevated highways across Rock Creek Park as a means of removing heavy traffic from the park, and backed passage of the Overton-Hunt bill for increased Federal appropriation to the District.

A. J. Driscoll, head of the Mid-City association, reviewed the Congressional bill and asked cooperation between the two associations in promoting more playgrounds in the central Washington area.

The members voted to donate $5 to Opportunity House and another $5 to the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club campaign for operating funds.

Mrs. Ella M. Thompson presided at the dinner, given at 1120 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest.

Skip-Stop Plan Urged By Schulte

Plan Used in Last War Would Expedite Streetcar and Bus Traffic, He Says

Revival of the skip-stop system of picking up passengers for streetcars and buses was suggested yesterday by Representative Schulte, chairman of the House Committee on Traffic, as an alternative to speeding.

Six Capital Transit Co. bus and streetcar operators testified on Monday that they had speeded chiefly to maintain their schedules.

"The skip-stop system apparently worked out satisfactorily during the World War days in Washington," Schulte said, "and it should be even more advantageous at this time with the city bulging with the greatest population in its history and its public transportation facilities seriously overtaxed."

The skip-stop system, as practiced in the World War period, meant, as a general rule, that stops were two blocks rather than one block apart. Some cities use the system now.

E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., last night said the plan "has possibilities."

"It would speed up the service," he said, "and might be an improvement if carefully controlled."

At the same time Merrill pointed out that residents whose stops are eliminated would object. The long stops adopted during the World War disappeared as residents petitioned the Public Utilities Commission for restoration of stops.

Merrill disclosed that eight automobiles would be placed in operation this week to check on the speed of bus and streetcar operators, especially in the outlying areas.

Schulte admitted that the skip-stop plan would cause some inconvenience to patrons.

"It will mean that some people may be forced to walk an additional block," he said, "to board a street car or bus, but these people will be rewarded with quicker transportation to and from work."

An 82-year-old retired carpenter was injured fatally last night, when, according to police, he fell into the path of a streetcar here.

The District's seventeenth traffic fatality victim of the year, Louis F. Schellhorn, 2503 Fourteenth Street Northwest, died in Garfield Hospital less than an hour after being struck in Fourteenth Street at Clifton Northwest.

Police said five witnesses reported that Schellhorn fell from the safety isle in front of the streetcar, which was operated by Elbridge Fallon, 25, of 523 Kennedy Street Northwest.

Traffic Survey May Propose Staggered Hours for Workers

Relief for Washington's rush-hour traffic snarl through a system of staggered hours of work for 155,000 Federal workers will be recommended by the District Highway Survey Board, which is currently studying methods to eliminate congestion in the downtown areas, it was learned yesterday.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, whose department is cooperating with the Highway Department and the Public Roads Administration in the survey, said he had been compiling data on a stagger system which would be placed before the Commissioners for further action.

Meanwhile, the Federal Budget Bureau is pursuing a study along the same lines and definite recommendations are expected to be placed before the White House in the near future.

The Capital Transit Co. is ready and willing to cooperate in any method suggested, E. D. Merrill, president, said yesterday. He said if the workers were to go to work at different times the cost to the company would be decreased and a better service provided.

As it is now, the transit facilities are taxed to capacity for one 15-minute period, between 8:45 a. m. and 9 a. m.

Although some of the Government agencies are now operating on a staggered hour system, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Navy Department arrive for work at 8 a. m., officials believe all working hours should be arranged in order to relieve the traffic congestion. This applies also to the rush when the work day is done.

Engineer Commissioner David McCoach, jr., said yesterday he would favor any plan which would eliminate the traffic bottlenecks and congestion.

The completed traffic survey, which is headed by Highway Director H. C. Whitehurst, also is expected to recommend parking lots or garages, which has caused the city heads considerable concern.

Former Numbers Chief Will Plead For Parole Again

Emmett Warring, former boss of the local numbers racket, will make a plea for freedom tomorrow at 2 p. m. before the parole board at Lorton Reformatory, where he is serving a prison sentence.

Denied his freedom by the board on February 9, 1940, Warring appealed for parole in December, but his case was deferred when the board met on January 2. His hearing tomorrow is a continuance of this case, and officials yesterday said a final disposition will be made this time.

Street Cars to Start Runs Over Track Extension Sunday

New service over seven streetcar lines will be started Sunday and Monday for employes in the Social Security, Railroad Retirement and Census Buildings in the Southwest Mall, it was announced yesterday.

The new service will be made possible by the completion of a $400,000 track extension by the Capital Transit Co. in Independence Avenue between First and Seventh Streets Southwest. Streetcars will begin running over the track Sunday.

Two main car lines will be rerouted to provide all-day service over the new extension, and five other lines during rush hours will run special cars on routes leading over the new track extension.

The two main lines are theTenleytown-Pennsylvania Avenue line, Route 30, and the Georgia Avenue-Seventh Street line, Route 70.

Service on the Tenleytown-Pennsylvania Avenue line will be given on week-days, Sundays and holidays, and on the Georgia Avenue-Seventh Street line except on Sundays and holidays.

The five others, which will give rush hour service, are:

From and to Rosslyn, via Rosslyn-Benning line, Route 13.

From and to Mount Pleasant, Mount Pleasant line, Route 43.

From and to points in North Fourteenth Street via the Fourteenth Street line, Route 53.

From and to points in Eleveneth Street via the Eleventh Street line, Route 63.

These rush hour cars will carry route numbers ending in "3" and destination signs reading Southwest Mall.

Extra service that has been provided during construction of the Mall tracks will be discontinued after Sunday on the Congress Heights bus line, Route A2; the Fourth Street line, Route V2, and the temporary line, X1. However, all regular service on Routes A1, A2, A3, A9 and V2 will be continued.

The rerouted Tenleytown-Pennsylvania Avenue car line, Route 30, will go from Seventh Street and Pennsylvania Avenue south on Seventh to Independence Avenue and over Independence to First Street Southwest.

Cars of that branch of the Georgia Avenue-Seventh Street line, Route 70, which now turn back north at the G. A. R. loop, will go south on Seventh Street to Independence Avenue, thence over Independence and around a loop south on Third Street, east on D Street and North on Second Street back to Independence Avenue.

Baering Down On the News

I saw a fleet of our mosquito boats off the Florida Coast last week and they can sure step out. They make about 60 an hour and shake like the dew-laps on a runaway camel.

When those boats get to twisting and dodging they are going to be harder to nail than your grandma's picture on a stone wall.

There doesn't seem to be any particular secrecy about them and that's what I like about our Government. It must make a foreign spy real mad the way we do things as open as an owl lunch wagon.

They are the boats that will go to England and they're faster than a gambler's shuffle. The oldtime rum-runners at Bimini have offered to run the mosquito fleet for Secretary Knox. The boys would like to combine business and pleasure in a business that was always a pleasure.

The lads state they outsmarted the Navy for 12 years and there is no reason why they shouldn't stock up a few cases on the return trip. It seems we are always running into bottlenecks.

Lord Halifax says we are not going to get that big English battleship that brought him over to this country. I saw it in Chesapeake Bay and she's about as big as downtown Pittsburgh and looks something like it.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 11.—The most severe thing that can be said about the Yankees is that if their every experiment proves a flop they will still be far from a pathetic case in the American League pennant race. If worst comes to worst, they'll be represented by about the same ball club that was nosed out by only three games in last year's finish.

POVICH

Today in one of his few near-garrulous moments, Manager Joe McCarthy denied that he was taking any great gamble in his attempt to reform the Yankees' infield. "So what if it flops," McCarthy was saying, "we've still got Gordon and Rolfe and Crosetti to play the same positions they were in last year, and I'm not worried about first base."

Thus, it is in a what-have-I-got to lose approach that the Yankees manager is tentatively turning the second base and shortstop jobs over to the rookies Gerry Priddy and Phil Rizzuto, and transplanting Gordon to first base. "I can't tell how those kids will go around second base until I give 'em a try at it, can I," asked McCarthy. "We can always go back to Gordon at second and Crosetti at shortstop."

Confidentially though, McCarthy doesn't expect the Kansas City kids to fail him. He's sold pretty thoroughly on the 5 foot six inch Italian shortstop and the taller Priddy. McCarthy used to be an infielder himself, and thinks that he knows what the qualifications should be. Both Rizzuto and Priddy have been performing to his taste and McCarthy will be highly disillusioned if they are not big leaguers.

As for the first base situation, the Yankees' manager laughs that off. "There isn't any first base situation as far as I'm concerned. Sure we got rid of Dahlgren, but that was entirely voluntary on our part. Gordon will be a better first baseman for us than Dahlgren ever was," He didn't say 'mark you well,' but that was very much implied by his manner of speaking.

"Joe Gordon should be a great first baseman. He's a great ball player, isn't he, and first base is the easiest position on the ball field, isn't it? If some of those big tanglefoots we've got in this league have been getting by at first base all right, then Gordon should be a star. He's shifty, and he can follow that ball and he'll learn how to find the bag with his feet. Joe has been the best second baseman in this league since he came up, and when he moves over to first, he's dropping down into cheaper company. If some of those big bohunks can play the bag, Gordon should be the best first baseman in the league."

The Yankees' manager apparently feels no sense of loss in the departure of Babe Dahlgren, who had been rated the finest-fielding first baseman in the league. As we pointed out, McCarthy was not reluctant to sell Dahlgren to the Bees. It is being bruited about in the Yankees' camp that McCarthy never did quite agree that Dahlgren was the brilliant defensive star that he was rated. He made plays that were easy look difficult with his fancy flourishes, the Yankee manager has been hinting.

The suspicion is that McCarthy became fed up with Dahlgren late last September when the fancy first baseman muffed an easy throw to first base at Cleveland in the second game of a doubleheader after the Yanks had knocked off Feller in the first game and were temporarily in the league lead. Dahlgren's muff cost the Yanks the game, and his batting, of course, never was a Yankee asset. Also, McCarthy was looking askance at the thickening legs of Dahlgren, who appeared to be losing his speed and dash. Today McCarthy was saying that "Gordon is stretching farther for a wide throw than Dahlgren ever did."

McCarthy should be the envy of every other manager in a big league training camp. A survey of the Yankees' 35 players in camp at St. Petersburg reveals that there isn't a man among 'em who hasn't had class double A league experience. You can't get into a Yankee training camp unless you've been something of a big shot in the class of ball that is only one notch lower than the majors.

It is a striking contrast between the position of McCarthy and, for example, the lot of Bucky Harris in the Nats' camp at Orlando. McCarthy has here at St. Petersburg nine rookie pitchers all of whom have impressive records in Class AA. ball. Bucky Harris' rookie pitchers have never seen double A ball. All save one have come out of the B and D leagues, and most of them don't know how to stand on the rubber. The Yanks don't trifle with the rank bushers.

For example, one young Yankee pitcher in camp here is in his eighth season as Yankee property but this is the first spring he has been allowed to poke his nose into the Yankee training camp. George Barley, a 26-year-old right-hander, was picked up by the Yankee system when he was pitching for a Long Island high school eight years ago. The Yankee system saw him through high school and then sent him through four years of Duke University. Then they shunted him to Shreveport and last year he won 15 and lost only 9 at Newark, and finally he won his way into a Yankee camp in his eighth year in the firm.

It's typical of the Yankee refining system. Before a young ball player is permitted to wear "New York" across the chest of his uniform he is already a man of some merit. There is nothing crude about McCarthy's material. The plug never reaches the Yankee camp.

With CONSIDINE

The Baseball Front, March 11.—If Sid Hudson, the million-dollar beauty Clark Griffith found in the ten-cent store of baseball, the Florida State League, does not win 20 games for the chronologically inept Washington Senators this coming season, Judge Landis ought to investigate.

CONSIDINE

You didn't hear too much about Hudson last year—that is, compared to the Newsom, Walters, Fellers, Derringers, etc. This first year rookie was wasting his fragrancy on the desert air of the second division, yet he did some things that knew no parallel. His 1940 record sounds drab at first sight—17 wins against 16 losses. But after June, at which time his record was two wins against nine losses, he won 15 games against seven losses. Nobody was better than that, all things considered.

His club finished with a team average of .496, but Hudson's last-half-of-the-season record was .682. He beat Lefty Grove, 1—0 and 3—1. After Washington lost seven straight games, and the Browns had won six straight from the Yanks and Red Sox, Sid beat the Browns, 1—0, and did not give up a hit until the ninth inning. He pitched another one-hitter against the A's, (to become the only pitcher in the league to toss two one-hitters) and finished up the season by beating the Yankees. He won six in a row. Which isn't precisely bad, for a fellow who still has some Chattanooga sandlot dust in his hair.

Here's a fellow who promises to be the new Walter Johnson for whom Clark Griffith has been searching for years. Not that he's particularly like Johnson in his methods. Johnson blew 'em down. This kid—he's 23—has a greater variety and he thinks far beyond his years. He's 6 feet, 4 inches, by the way, and has a quick, shrewd pitcher's brain. He seems to know things instinctively, as witness the time that the wise and venerable Dutch Leonard was assigned by Bucky Harris to give the kid a lesson in holding men on bases. "Cheest," Leonard squawked to Harris, after a few minutes of the lesson had elapsed, "this kid's teaching me things."

He's one of Griff's fabulous bargains. He cost $5,000, which is a lot of money for Griff to pay for a regular—inasmuch as the Old Fox got Joe Cronin for $7,500, Joe Judge for nothing, Cecil Travis for $200, Buddy Lewis for $500 and garnisheed Sam Rice in payment for a bad debt.

Griff moaned a little when he gave up that five grand to the Sanford team of the Florida league, to which Hudson had been sent by Joe Engel, the whacky Chattanooga boss who discovered so many of Griff's fire-sale ballplayers. But it may turn out to be Griff's greatest investment since Cronin, who gave Washington a pennant and who was eventually sold for $250,000.

On the open market today Hudson unquestionably would bring at least $100,000. There was a mild piece of phenagling in connection with the sale, but nothing very serious. By rights, he belonged to Engel, who now has severed connections with Griff's modest chain system. But Griff still holds a sotto voce mortgage on Engel's Chattanooga club, and, in view of that, and out of their long friendship, Griff came up with the prize. Scouts for the Indians, Pirates and Bees were on Hudson's trail and the Indian scout concerned was dismissed whep he failed to sign the lanky kid.

Old Ted Lyons did Hudson a nice turn. One day in Chicago he watched Hudson warming up for a while, then came over to him and said, "Listen, kid, your change of pace is lousy. Here's the way you should do it . . ." So Sid went out and beat the White Sox. Bucky Harris gave him his great sidearm delivery, too. And Griff helped bolster his morale by insisting that he be given his regular turn in the box, even after he had lost seven straight games at the start of the season. Griff also gave him two voluntary raises in pay, when he was going bad. He now makes about $6,000 a year, approximately $25,000 less than Feller and Newsom, who, if they are any better, are

By Jack Munhall

With the inadvertent aid of the press (or despite it) the Washington Eagles put on a fiery finish last night to defeat the New York Rovers, 4-3, and boost their Eastern Amateur Hockey League lead to 3 points.

With the Eagles holding a 3-1 advantage and 2,200 paying patrons ready to leave Riverside Stadium, here's what happened:

Flames burst forth and devoured a section of the red, white and blue bunting covering the front of the elevated press box on the west side of the arena.

Rovers Catch Spark

Startled newsmen inexpertly attempted to extinguish the blaze, probably started by a cigarette. The Rovers caught a needed spark and through the disorganized ranks of the Eagles they poured in two goals within 13 seconds and with less than 3 minutes to play the score was tied, 3-3.

Play stopped as the officials saw the flames. Across the ice dashed firemen and police, yelling to the press box habitues "throw it on the ice." Finally the newsmen succeeded in tearing the charred remains of the banner away from the posts which held it and no serious damage was seen. Up rushed Len Burrage, captain of the Eagles, to protest of Referee Mel Harwood.

"Didn't See 'Em"

"I didn't see 'em score. What's going on here."

"Quiet," cautioned Referee Harwood with a disdainful glance. "You guys didn't have to watch the fire."

Play continued. Norm Burns, Washington's league-leading goal scorer, swept up the ice, grabbed a pass from Frank Mailley and fired in the point that offset the fire. The Eagles won on Burns' second goal of the final period and the press box occupants thereby were saved an unhappy experience. For the victory is important to the Eagles, who now lead Baltimore's Orioles by three points and have only to win six of their eight remaining matches to clinch the championship even if Baltimore sweeps the nine matches left for them.

Frank Dotten and Bob Brownridge were credited with the two goals the Rovers were alleged to have scored during the confusion.

Washington on Defensive

Tight defensive hockey, swift skating and hard checking featured the opening period. The Rovers took a 1-0 advantage largely attributable to their speed. A New York line of Elmer Kreller, Red Tilson and Frankie Parker caught the Eagles' defense napping after a Washington rush had been repelled near the New York nets.

Parker grabbed the puck while Scherer, the Eagles' defenseman, vainly tried to back check, and flipped it to Kreller, who then set up a pretty play, culminating in a goal by Tilson. That's one time they didn't have to ask "Where's Elmer?"

Washington was placed on the defensive midway the session when Pranschke drew a tripping penalty, and, although the Eagles played well in preventing even a New York shot during Pranschke's absence, they never were able to recapture their spark of the early minutes. During the first five minutes the Eagles had given New York Goalie Cosby many an uncomfortable moment.

Wasted Energy

The second period, for the most part, was a lot of wasted energy for both teams. Still, the Eagles popped in a couple of luck-anointed tallies and forged ahead, 2-1.

Almost identical were the plays on which Washington scored. MacBeth made the first in the second minute of play when, standing at the side of the net, he took a hard pass from Mailley and with the same motion whacked it into the nets. Lightning-like was MacBeth's swipe and for moments no one seemed to know what had transpired.

After about 15 minutes of sloppy play, the Eagles blazed the red light again, with Dewey as the scorer, and Pranschke as the passer, presenting a sequel to the act of the first goal. Even more spectacular was Dewey's. For he seemed to catch a shoulder-high pass as a baleball player would bat at the ball, and with the same swing guide the puck through Goalie Cosby.

Roosevelt Star Tries to Stave Off an Upset

35-26 Upset Brings Title To Gonzaga

By Bill Burnett

A "Cinderella team" of Gonzaga High cagers that was rated as low as a 5-1 underdog came up from the cellar and snatched Roosevelt High's city championship last night, winning by a 35-26 margin before the largest scholastic basketball crowd old-timers could remember gathering at Tech gym.

Upward of 5,500 howling fans packed Tech stands to the limit, spilled over on the floor and finally watched what was probably the year's most exciting battle standing up.

Opening the double bill that marked the wind-up of the Metropolitan Scholastic Championships, Hyattsville High's girls team captured the title of this vicinity with a convincing 25-17 decsion over Mount Rainier.

And capping the whole proceedings, trophies were presented to the "outstanding" teams and individuals. After a vote by a committee headed by "Fod" Cotton, former C. U. coach, and consisting of Coach Bill Reinhart, of G. W.; Staff Cassell, of American U.; Elmer Ripley, of G. U., and Burt Shipley, of Maryland U., the cup for the best all-around male performance went to Bobby Mulvihill, The Washington Post's All-Metropolitan center. Patricia Mullen, Mount Rainier forward, took down the trophy for the best girl in action, and Calvin Coolidge's five was honored with a cup indicative of an "Exceptionally Meritorious Performance," considering its youth and inexperience.

With Mulvihill's nomination for the "Outstanding Boy" award, another brilliant athlete saw his hopes of taking the coveted cup sail out of the window for the second straight year. Last year when his club won the title, Hymie Perlo, Roosevelt captain, bowed to Eastern's Bob Custer in the judge's opinion.

Mulvihill's selection, however,

Horton Smith Winner In West Coast Open

Byron Nelson Beaten by One Stroke In Playoff as Rival Gets 6 Birdies

By the Associated Press

Belleair, Fla., March 11.—Horton Smith, veteran Oak Park, Ill., professional, hit the golf jackpot for the first time this winter when he shot a three-under-par 68 here today to nose out Byron Nelson, Toledo, Ohio, by one stroke in an 18-hole play-off for the Florida West Coast Open Championship.

Smith lagged behind Nelson by two strokes through the sixth hole. The one-time Joplin ghost shot three birdies on three of the first six holes of the incoming nine to take command. He almost got a hole-in-one on the 136-yard fifteenth hole, where his tee shot hit just beyond the cup and jumped back within an inch of the flag.

Smith had six birdies. Nelson shot two birdies and an eagle on the 475-yard sixth, where he holed out a 60-foot chip from the back of the green. They were over par on only three holes.

Smith almost tossed away his advantage at the eighteenth when he took a six after his approach shot hit a tree and buried itself in a trap, leaving him an almost unplayable lie. But Nelson, who had birdied the same hole on the last round yesterday to tie Smith, also missed the green with his approach and failed to drop a 9-foot putt for a four that would have evened the match.

The cards:

Smith out	444	344	334	—33
Nelson out	434	343	434	—32

Smith in	442	532	546	—35	—68
Nelson in	453	443	545	—37	—69

Smith took $700 first money in the $3,000 tournament, with $450 second money going to Nelson.

New Pistol Marks Made as Treasury Shooter Tops Field

By the Associated Press

Tampa, Fla., March 11.—A new record was set in the opening match of the National Mid-Winter Pistol Matches here today, when five shooters bettered the previous mark of 374 in the center-fire any caliber event.

P. M. Chapman, U. S. Treasury Department, had high gun of the group when he totaled 384 to win top honors; Harry Reeves, of the Detroit police, was second with 382; C. A. Brown, Tampa police, 380; Lee Echols, United States Treasury team, 379, and Godesiedo Basso, Cuban army, 376.

Will Hurlburt, Jacksonville (Fla.) police, won sharpshooter's honors in the event with 360, while D. Hernandez, Cuban police, was high marksman with 351.

The previous record in the 40-shot event was held by Charlie Askins, of Texas, who isn't shooting this year.

Dodgers Find Nats Have Good Rookie Pitcher Basking in Cuba

Griffith May Have Answer in His Over-Looked Islander

By a Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 11.—The cables from Cuba caused some confusion in the Nats' camp tonight.

Earlier in the day, Clark Griffith saw three of his pitchers pummeled for 15 hits and beaten, 11-6, by the New York Giants. Manager Bucky Harris was deploring the pitching situation on his ball club.

A few hours later, The Washington Post correspondent relayed to Griffith and Harris the news that a pitcher who is the property of the Washington club, had beaten the Brooklyn Dodgers at Havana with a five-hit performance this afternoon.

The pitcher's name is Gilberto Torres, and the Nats' bosses were so contemptuous of his ability that they had not even bothered to call him to Washington training camp.

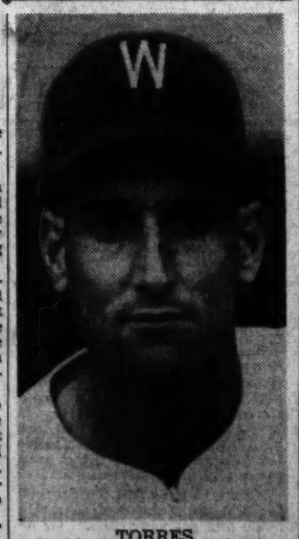
Torres pitched the full nine innings in holding the Dodgers to five hits.

"Perhaps we made a mistake," said Griffith. "Maybe we'll ask Torres to join us."

The Nats' owner revealed that the Cuban is under contract to the Nats' Charlotte farm, and was not considered worthy of a tryout by the Nats this spring.

"But we still own him and if he can pitch that kind of ball, he'll pitch for Washington, not Charlotte."

Torres has not yet accepted the contract terms offered him by Calvin Griffith, Charlotte president.



TORRES

However, he is not yet considered a holdout as he is not due to report to the team until March 20.

Torres, a slender right hander, is the son of a former catcher with the Washington club, and was given a tryout with the Nats last spring. He was taken to Washington with the club but later released to Charlotte, where he won 10 games and lost 11. He pitches a knuckle ball.

Harmon to Earn $13,500 in First Film Appearance

By the Associated Press

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 11.—Michigan's Tom Harmon, All-America halfback of 1940, will be in the movies soon.

Harmon disclosed today that he would receive $13,500 from the Crosby agency in Hollywood for a screen appearance next summer. He said he would go to Hollywood in June, when classes are over.

Capt. Forest Evashevski, who blocked for Harmon on the gridiron at Michigan, may have a role in the picture, too, Harmon said.

The Michigan football star said the Crosby agency had an option on his services for a second film, for which he would be paid $17,500.

N. L. Rivals Shell Beck, MacFayden

Senators Trail, 10-1, In 5th, Hit Hubbell To Rally; Travis Hits Line Homer

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Orlando, Fla., March 11.—That four-game losing streak of the New York Giants is history. The Nats put an end to it today. They murdered it. The Washington athletes, not to be denied, rushed into the fray with five gift runs for the Giants in the first inning and forced an 11-to-6 victory on the New Yorkers.

These five runs in the first inning were the gift of young Joe Beck, the Class D League right-hander, to whom the Florida State League is beckoning tonight. Young Beck didn't get anybody out until he was facing the sixth man in the Giants' batting order, to the dismay of the 3,000 Orlando citizens at Tinker Field.

The Giants hit the Washington pitching with everything but the lease-lend bill. Denny MacFayden and Dutch Leonard, who relieved Beck, were no stars. Fifteen hits rattled off the Giants' bats and three of them were homers—a pair by Frist Baseman Babe Young. Meanwhile, the Nats were struggling along with eight hits.

MacFayden Cuffed

The Nats were out of the ball game virtually before they were in it. They came to bat in the first inning with a 5-0 deficit staring them down, and, by the time the Giants were done cuffing MacFayden around in the fifth inning the score, said to relate, was 10 to 1.

Saddest of all the Nats was Jimmy Pofahl, who found his way into the line-up late in the game, and in the seventh inning whaled the daylights out of one of Ace Adams' pitches. It was a terrific fly into centerfield, and Pofahl rounded the bases on his blow. He tipped his bat to the applauding fans as he crossed the plate, only to learn later that his "home run" had been charged as an error to Leftfielder Morris Arnovich, who had dropped the ball after a long run and a collision with Centerfielder Frank Demaree.

Young Beck succeeded only in pitching himself out of what had been the esteem of Manager Bucky Harris. The first pitch he chucked was rapped into centerfield for a single by Nap Rucker, and the house fell in on the Nats' rookie. Witek rammed a triple into rightfield, Danning doubled to right, Ott hit a mere single to center, and Babe Young lifted a homer over the screen in rightfield. Score: Giants, 5; Nats, 0.

In the third inning Young took a parting shot at young Beck with his second homer over the same wall and the rookie finished his three-inning chore with a record of six runs and seven hits.

Danny MacFayden gave the Giants a run in the fourth, and we mean gave. Cecil Travis put it in motion when he fumbled Pinchhitter Maynard's grounder. Maynard scored from second when confusion reigned in the Nats' infield on Witek's meek pop fly over the infield. First Baseman George Archie and Catcher Rick Ferrell talked each other off the ball, which landed safely, and Maynard crossed the plate, which MacFayden had failed to cover at any time during the proceedings.

In the fifth, they rushed three runs home against MacFayden. Mel Ott punched a single past Lewis, Young walked, Hartnett singled to center, and a bit later Lou Chiozza belted the Giants' third homer over the rightfield wall.

Leonard pitched the last three innings, allowing a hit in each and a run in the eighth, when Archie dropped a perfect throw to first base on Arnovich's grounder to Robertson. Babe Young's substitute, Mc-

Montgomery Discontinues Annual School Track Meet

New Policy In Athletics Is Advised

Interschool Competition Is Planned; Colored Meets to Be Held

Discontinuance of the annual athletic meet of Montgomery County white schools was ordered yesterday by the Montgomery County Board of Education at its meeting in Rockville. The colored field meet will be continued.

The action of the board was in accordance with a recommendation of the committee on health and recreation of the Teachers Association of the county.

The committee recommended that a schedule of interschool meets be substituted for the annual field day on the theory that they will create more interest in the athletic events and at the same time continue the interest over a longer period.

The school meets have been a colorful event at the old Rockville Fairgrounds for nearly a score of years and their passing will be regretted by oldtimers who once thrilled to the records broken by the old school and its teams but like the Rockville Fair with which it vied for annual interest, it has been relegated to the dimness of antiquity by the action of the board.

The new program will call for interschool soccer, tennis, badminton and other contests arranged in a schedule to provide for contests between the various schools at staggered intervals so that the strain of all-day competition will be removed from the growing youngsters.

Cameo Starts Spring Work On Saturday

The town's most rabid baseball impresario, perhaps barring the Nats' Clark Griffith, gives his team its first taste of action Saturday when Manager (Connie) Wyche calls his Cameo Furniture nine out for the opening of spring training.

Ballston Stadium and 1:30 p. m. will be the scene and starting time for the drills, and Manager Wyche himself will attend to contracted players who fail to show up. Other youngsters with a leaning for the national pastime will be made welcome and given a chance to make the team which will compete again in the powerful Washington Post Industrial League.

Going into the 1941 season, Wyche is determined that his club doesn't continue as the perennial runner-up to Heurich as league champion. Outstanding stars of last year have been re-signed, and the veteran manager is scouring the local ranks for further strength in his lineup.

First game of the season for Cameo will be on March 29, with Georgetown University's representatives, coached by Joe Judge. The road season will start Easter Saturday and Sunday with Newport News, Va., of the Virginia League, and April 26 will see The Post League opener with Heurich.

To date Wyche has signed five pitchers, a full complement of infielders and two good outfielders from last year's team. The pitchers are Otis Printz, Frank Deavers, Tommy Hahn, Edgar Adair and Bob Roberts. Jimmy Schwab and Al Stokes will do the catching; Jack James, Jake Schwatz, Steve Jacobchik and Dick Wyche will fight for the first-base job; "Booty" McQuinn will handle second; Louis Mizell and Ed Thompson will handle third, and Ken McQuinn and John Bonifant will attend to the shortstop post. "Hoggy" Albert and Bill Harris have been carried over from last year's outfield.

Tuna Run at Stewart, 153-Pounder Landed

Stewart, Fla., March 11.—Boating a 153-pound 4-ounce Allison tuna, F. K. Weyerhaeuser, of St. Paul, Minn., took the lead in that division of the Sailfish Club Tournament here today. Fishing from the boat Three Brothers and guided by Capt. William Frazier, Wyerhaeuser made the catch on a 24-thread line. Charter captains reported a brisk run of tuna offshore today.

surprised no one. The rangy 17-year-old was in there stealing the ball, setting up plays and generally leading his team every second. He was admirably seconded by Bernie Nolan, "Old Mister Nonchalance," who found a hot hand and led the scoring of both clubs with 12 points. Franny Counselman, high scorer, had an off night and managed for only six points, one less than smooth-working Joe O'Lone, and two better than 115-pound Hart Downs.

Downs Heckles

Perlo was heckled all night by Downs and could get only six points, but Frank Ciango, another All-Metropolitan ace, and Tommy Robertson kicked in with 9 and 8, respectively.

After one quarter, the Riders trailed, 7-2, as the Purple clicked in every department. Late baskets by Perlo and iCango made Roosevelt's half-time deficit only 17-14, and going into the last session its was 21-18. The closest it could come was at 19-18 in the third quarter.

Its foul shots falling off the hoop and its field tosses missing even the backboard, Roosevelt found its deficit 32-24 with 2 minutes left, and was forced to toss in the sponge when Perlo went out on personal fouls. Second stringers of both clubs went in and the count stayed about the same.

Avenged Loss

It was the second time Roosevelt and Gonzaga had faced this year, the Riders winning the first with the use of their second team much of the time.

The girls' game was the fourth between the teams and left them even in the matter of victories. Hyattsville got off to a brilliant start behind its classic Hildur Reeves, took a 13-0 lead at the half, and coasted in easily. Best scorer of the losers was Betty Ott, diminutive forward, who rammed home 6 points as her mates made a valiant but futile last-half rally.

Florida Tournament Anglers Registering Prize Catches

Number of Contestants in Miami Event Unknown; $10,000 in Prizes Split April 20

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., March 11.—Even the ones that got away couldn't have been much bigger than the prize catches in the metropolitan Miami fishing tournament.

And no armistice is in sight for the beauties that swarm in these waters, before April 20 when the event ends and the lucky anglers divide $10,000 in prizes.

Nobody knows how many persons have wet a line inside the tournament boundaries since opening day January 1. Only those who haul in a potential prize winner have to register, so everybody who goes fishing with a rod and reel while the event is in progress theoretically is a contestant.

Biggest Marlin

The giant so far is a 334-pound blue marlin landed by Huston Brown, of Dayton, Ohio, in Bahamian waters. Since the biggest marlin hang out near the islands, there is a special Bahamas division and Brown's catch will not be in competition against the heaviest blue marlin boated in the Florida division—a 270-pounder credited to Paul S. Mory, of Philadelphia.

In contrast is a 4 pound 5 ounce fish caught by Forrest Hodges, of Miami, which is the heaviest chiro reported.

David J. Craig, jr., of Charlotte, N. C., and James R. Coon, of Bronsville, N. Y., share the honor of reeling in the longest sailfish. Each entered one measuring 7 feet 9 inches. Coon's catch weighed 75¼ pounds, tops so far.

A 98-pound tarpon which lost a keen fight to Marjorie Duncan, of Lexington, Ky., is a baby alongside a 218-pound mako which fell to Royal A. Ferris, jr., of Dallas, Texas, while he was fishing in the Bahamas division.

Catches have been entered in 37 classifications.

Thornhill, Former Stanford Coach, Married at Reno

By the Associated Press

Reno, March 11.—Claude E. (Tiny) Thornhill, 47, former Stanford football coach, and Miss Jean C. Liedloff, 25, of Palo Alto, Calif., were married today by Judge William McKnight.

Thornhill was on the Stanford coaching staff 18 years, and was head football coach from 1933 to 1939. His first three teams went to the Rose Bowl.

The bride moved to Palo Alto several months ago from Philadelphia, where she was assistant manager of the secretarial exchange. Her mother, Mrs. Josephine M. Liedloff, lives in Los Altos, Calif.

Thornhill's first wife died in December, 1939.

Jacobs Plans Eliminations For Heavies

By International News Service

New York, March 11.—The refusal today of the Cleveland Boxing Commission to sanction the proposed Joe Louis-Tony Musto fight appears as another harsh and true indictment of the heavyweight division, but, this time, Promoter Mike Jacobs has an answer. Jacobs would hold a Nation-wide tournament to find a fellow able to compete with Champion Joe Louis.

Mike and millions of other people know that Louis dominates the heavyweight roost more than a sultan holds down his harem.

Joe has fought once, and often twice, everybody supposed to be anybody in the heavyweight kingdom. The result always is the same. Louis always and easily is "the winner and still champeen."

This Mr. Musto is a gentleman somewhat well known in Cleveland's environs. Most everywhere else they'll ask, "Who is he?" Briefly, he is hardly in the class of many other guys who lay prone on the canvas while the referee tolled ten and the Brown Bombers peered with a dead-pan eye from a neutral corner.

Even Jacobs, then, could not arouse himself to a state of dignified irritation when Cleveland Boxing Commissioner Tris Speaker said the Louis-Musto match, planned for April 2, "could not be called a fair contest."

Vic Carroll, trying in vain to rouse his steed, in last night's donkey basketball game at Uline's Arena. It was all for sweet charity and the show goes on tonight and tomorrow night—same time, same place

Hail to the Redskins!

They couldn't do much with the Chicago Bears, but last night at Uline's Arena they came into their own with a quintet of Rocky-Mountain burros.

Five Redskins rode these burros to a sensational 8-to-4 victory over a hard-riding band of professional rodeo stars known as Thorny Guests Cowboy Champions in a weird exhibition indentified as donkey basketball.

It was all in good fun and for the sake of sweet charity, and the Redskins made the night a howling success with an exhibition of ball passing and roughhouse tactics that had some of the fans thinking they were back in Griffith Stadium. Redskins Charley Malone, Bob McChesney, Clem Stralka, Vic Carroll and Bob Masterson turned out to make the inaugural of donkey basketball a success. The Northeast Businessmens Association, sponsor of the charity show, will see the sport through a series of games tonight, tomorrow and Friday nights.

Arlington Crown To Tucker A. C.

The Tucker A. C. won the independent championship of Arlington County last night, defeating the Macabees, 51-41, in the Washington-Lee High gym. Tucker took command at the start and was never headed.

If You Know Me, Say Nothing:

Pieces of Haight

Washington, D. C.

Dear Boss:

For some unknown reason I'm getting the reputation of being a lush, a sop, a rumhead and a booze hound. All of which shows how easy it is for some people to jump at conclusions. (But, Boss, if you know me, say nothing, I will see you later.)

HAIGHT

It is bad enough when I start getting sweet little messages about "you can't drink it up, because they make it while you sleep," but when they start naming drinks in your honor and then invite you to try them, it's about time to call a halt. Boss, I'm going on the wagon.

Brother Ray Benton, originator of the Walter Haight Club, has sent me a letter in which he informs me that the Boston Restaurant is featuring two concoctions invented by one Charlie.

The first is the "Haight Cooler," and there may be more to the second portion of that name than a quick glance implies.

This is a simple mixture, according to Brother Benton. Into an empty barrel is placed the following ingredients: 1 quart rum, 1 pint kerosene, 2 gallons Bourbon, 1 tablespoon Sterno, one-fifth Scotch, peelings from 5 potatoes, 2 gallons red wine, 6 aspirin tablets, 1 phone-number bondsman and 1 record phonograph (which says, "I don't remember a thing, judge.")

Stir slowly, working in potato peelings and kerosene until smooth and creamy. Nail top on barrel and push barrel around block three times at speed not to exceed 15 miles per hour. Then drain off liquid, chop up barrel and serve staves at room temperature.

The other drink is the "Haight Master," also known as the "Haight Power Dive." It is a sort of streamlined Zombie affair, so they tell me. However, there is a certain amount of mystery involved. Charlie is very secretive about this drink and will not reveal the ingredients or his method of mixing.

It is served in a gallon jug, equipped with electric bell and cigarette lighter. The waitress plugs in at a light socket. When the jug is empty, the bell rings, the waitress returns, places a fuse in your right ear and hands you the lighter.

Needless to say, Boss, only one is served to a customer. They should rename that one "Pieces of Haight."

Not to change the subject, Boss, but do you remember that Hialeah clubhouse sticker that I had such a hard time putting on the wind shield in Miami? Well, I had twice as much trouble getting it off the windshield the other day when I went to get my car inspected.

And speaking of cars, my boy asked the other night, "When is the last day for getting new tags?"

"March 31. Why do you ask?" I replied.

He came back with "I was going to ask you to drive me somewhere April 1. But that's OK, I'll walk."

Boss, you can't believe everything that Ari Brown says on the radio. After hearing him brag about his back hurting from shoveling snow, I went out to his house the other night and the path leading from the street to his front door looked like it had been made with a tablespoon.

He might have had the decency to tack up a sign reading: "Go home and get your skis." Or he could warn you before you get out there to take lessons at tight-rope walking, following the beam, or something.

Furthermore, he was in bed asleep when I arrived—exhausted from shoveling snow.

Sofie—not you, Boss.

Always your ace,

POUNDS HAIGHT.

Casey Is Shelled In Second Inning For Six Runs as Cuban Stars Score

By the United Press

Havana, March 11.—The Brooklyn Dodgers today took a 9-to-1 trimming from the Cuban All-Stars before a crowd of 1,500 at Miami Field.

The Dodgers made only five hits from the offerings of Giuseppe Torres, Cuban hurler, who is the property of Charlotte, Washington Senators' farm club. The Cubans pounced on Dodger Moundsman Hugh Casey in the second inning for five hits and six runs. They made their other three counters in the seventh when Curt Davis was pitching.

Aided by Catchers Ben Warren and Thompson Livingston, Prothro tutored Frank Melton, Tom Hughes, Dale Jones and Johnnie Podganjy in the mysteries of "smart" pitching, with special empasis on inside pitching.

Two Browns Hurt

San Antonio, Tex., March 11 (U.P.).—Two St. Louis Browns' infielders, Johnny Berardino and Rookie Roy Henner, were injured during practice today. Berardino's head was grazed and Henner suffered a possible fractured nose. Both were hit by fast grounders that took bad bounces.

Triple Play Works

Randolph Field, Tex., March 11 (AP).—The Boston Bees put on a good show for 3,500 soldiers, pilots and officers today in blanking the Randolph Field Ramblers, 8-0, in an exhibition game.

A triple play in the ninth inning wiped out the Ramblers' only scoring threat as Ed Garnett and Tom Earley, who divided pitching duties for the Bees, set them down with only four hits.

Henry Majeski started the triple killing by snaring a line drive, whipping the ball to Buddy Gremp at second, and Gremp fired it to Buddy Hassett on first for the complete round.

Pitchers Field

Tampa, Fla., March 11 (AP).—On the theory that pitchers should know how to do something besides pitch, Manager Bill McKechnie of the Cincinnati Reds drilled the whole gang today on covering first base when the first baseman is otherwise occupied.

Bucky Walters will start tomorrow's training game with the St. Louis Cardinals at St. Petersburg.

San Bernardino, Calif., March 11 (AP).—Seattle, 1940 Pacific Coast League champions, hammered Russ Bauers for six hits and seven runs and went on to defeat the Pittsburgh Pirates, 8 to 3, in an exhibition game today.

Frank Kalin, pinch hitting for Bauers, hit a home run with a mate aboard in the Buc half of the second.

Norman Groff Rolls 174-430; Sets Record

Norman Groff, C. B. Long & Son, was the top roller in the Georgetown Commercial with 171-430, the same total tying Kenny Beck's effort of several weeks ago and the set addding one stick to the high that Dave Burrows marked up early in the season. Groff's highs led his team to the big counts with 648 and 1,814, and sparked a three-game victory over Party Popcorn that put them in the third spot. The leading Hillows Cafe quintet lost all three to Old Home Cafe, but are still in front by three contests.

Art Woody pepped up the winners with a splendid 396 set. Sam Benson, high average man for the loop with 121-59, rolled his third straight 383 set, and Dave Burrows, Chappelle Billiards, helped his team eke out an odd-game win over Thompson Welding by his usual Garrison finish in the tenth box.

Tucker Stars

Andy Tucker was the leader in the Bethesda Duckpin Association for his highs of 149-393; sparked an odd game over the league-leading Leon's Men's Shop quintet by his Hyson's Insurance boys. Wise Bros. Radio team took high game with 583, while the Simmons Barbers quintet won the set after a pinfall of 1,679. Hyson's is in second place.

Watkins Shoots 154

Watkins, Bethesda Presbyterian, was the leader in the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Church loop at Bethesda bowling alleys, his 154 game and 371 set showing the way. The Mount Zion Baptist boys won team honors with a 552 game and a 1,595 set, taking all three from Kensington Methodist as well. Christ Lutheran scored a sweep over Bethesda First Baptist. Mount Zion Baptist leads with 20-7, with Bethesda Presbyterian next with 18-9.

Diamond Cab League

Al Spivey, Brightwood, and Stephenson, Northeast, divided individual honors in the Diamond Cab League at Brookland Recreation, the former with 143 for top game while the latter's 374 high set made it possible for his team to take highs with 596 and 1,652. Restaurant and Shoreham are still tied for league leadership.

Scaldisari Shines

Scaldisari, Fluorescent Planned Lighting, had 142 for the high game in the Electrical League at Takoma Recreation, which aided his quintet in taking top totals of 611 and 1,659. Ed Cleary, Atlantic, was best for the set with a 370 count.

Ruth Rothgeb High

Ruth Rothgeb, high average bowler in the Maryland-D. C. Ladies League at Silver Spring, led last night with top totals of 148-374 and, with the help of Charlotte Suess' 372, helped the Bergmann's Laundry girls take team highs with 584 and 1,693, the latter count third high for the season. Corr's Sport Shop had near high team set of 1,635. Howard Hairdressers, Shaffer Flower Shop, Bergmann's Laundry and Sandford's, Inc., scored sweeps over their foes of the night.

W.B.C. Beats WPA in Game To End Games

The oddest game of the D. C. Recreation League to date resulted at Macfarland gym last night as Washington Boys Club nosed out PWA, 11-10. Only one player, Brady, of W. B. C., managed for more than two points, and only one player, the same team's Kilgalen, failed to hit the basket.

In other games at the same gym Hot Shoppes smashed the Greyhounds, 57-10, and Greek-Americans defeated Selective Service, 26-21. At Central, Call Radio lost a 35-30 decision to Postoffice Mailing, Ballards tripped Bowie Thoroughbreds, 27-20, and Maryland Park Sport Club beat Briggs A. C., 32-27.

High spot of combined Roosevelt-Macfarland play was Rogers' 16-point scoring as A. G. O. beat Pepco, 33-25. Polish Club beat Mails and Files, 17-12, and Washington Loan & Trust turned back F. D. I. C., 26-17. Other games in the league went to Bliss Electric, 46-23, over Capital City A. Z. A.; Sons of Pericles, 34-8, over Labor Department; Finnish-Americans, 22-14, over Harvesters; Census Farmers, 32-30, over National Baptist; Air Duct, 36-33, over Census Ranchers, and D. C. Silents, 24-22, over the Ramblers.

Winner of Galento-Buddy Baer Fight Here Will Meet Louis

World Champion Promised for Summer Bout At Griffith Stadium, Says Promoter Alvis

After a shopping tour in New York to find a summer opponent for Joe Louis here, Ray Alvis returned late yesterday and announced that the lucky man will be the winner of the Tony Galento-Buddy Baer 15-round battle scheduled for April 8 at Uline Arena.

"It's a natural," screamed Alvis. "New York's crying for it. Philadelphia tried to take it right out from under my nose—it'd be a sell-out anywhere."

What Alvis was referring to was the Galento-Baer heavyweight brawl.

"I think it's going to be one of those things, what do you call it, a barroom brawl," Alvis explained happily. "I figure that no matter how much looking around I can do I won't find anybody who can stand up to Louis any better than the winner of this fight."

Dempsey Likes It

Strangely enough, Alvis' enthusiasm was echoed, in a more dignified manner, by Jack Dempsey, who passed through Washington yesterday en route to New York from Miami.

The old Manassa Mauler, interviewed at the Washington Airport, said the Galento-Baer battle should be a "great thing for boxing in the Capital."

"Both of those boys hit hard and it looks about even up to me," the former heavyweight champion said. Incidentally, Dempsey once had an interest in Max Baer and Galento.

Big Test for Baer

Dempsey was inclined to take Two-Ton Tony's comeback seriously, demanding to know, "Why not? The guy can punch, can't he? It's no disgrace to get knocked out by Max Baer—Baer's tops when he's right. I'd say that Galento's fight with Buddy will be as colorful a fight as could be made."

Dempsey said he believes Galento will furnish Maxie's 6-foot-6 245-pound brother his first real test.

"If the kid can get past Tony, nobody can laugh him off," Dempsey said. "He's a big fellow with plenty in his favor. His future is in his own hands, however, for he eventually must make or break himself."

Louis Promised

The younger Baer has been accused of "quitting" when the going gets tough in the ring.

Alvis said he had been assured by Mike Jacobs that Louis will be available this summer for a fight in Griffith Stadium. Galento, who hasn't had a fight since being knocked out last July 2 by Max Baer, has been making periodic demands for a return bout with the champion.

Dempsey managed Galento when Tony came to Washington and was technically knocked out in the thirteenth round by Marty Gallagher after flooring Marty five times. Dempsey refereed one of the preliminaries on that card, which attracted a $28,000 gate.

The former heavyweight champion said he had not planned to attend the Galento-Baer bout as yet but may decide to do so.

"I'm always available when they want me here, and I'm greatly interested in boxing's future here. Any time I can give Washington a break from the standpoint of boxing, I'll be only too glad to do so."

Plummer, Cox Vie for Prize As No. 1 Meanie

A special prize, gift of Promoter Joe Turner, designated the winner as Rough Man No. 1 of these parts, will be awarded the winner of tomorrow night's feature wrestling match at Turner's Arena between Lou Plummer, the Baltimore villain, and Joe Cox, the Kansas Krasher.

Whether the Green Hornet, who rates with Ernie Dusek as coholder of the Public Enemy No. 1 honor, will come into the picture with challenges to such recognition remains to be seen. The Hornet also is on tomorrow's card, meeting Paul Boesch, of California. Ernie is due here for a match this month.

Plummer, according to Turner, claimed the rough man title, and threw challenges right and left last Thursday. Cox says he accepted the defi only to prove that he could outrough "Gentleman Lou," according to Turner.

A special attraction on the card will find two feminine stars, Pasy Miller, Nevada cowgirl, facing Betsy Forbes, of New Mexico, with the winner to meet Mildred Burke for the championship in a few weeks.

Yvon Robert, of Montreal, former titleholder, will meet Joe DeValteau, French refugee grappler, in a special match. An opponent for Warren (Flash) Bockwinkle will be closed out today.

Jimmy Dermaret Quits Houston Job; Takes Conn. Post

By International News Service

Houston, Tex., March 11.—Jimmy Demaret, who got his golfing start as a 10-year-old Houston caddy and became one of the ranking players in the game, resigned today as professional at Houston's Brae Burn Country Club to accept a similar position at the Wee Burn Country Club in Noroton, Conn.

DEMARET

Although his contract expires at the Houston Club April 1, Demaret said he expected to compete in the Masters' Tournament in Augusta, Ga., April 3 to 5, before taking over at Wee Burn.

Demaret was the outstanding golfer of the 1940 winter season when he won seven of nine major tournaments in which he entered.

By the Associated Press

Oklahoma City, March 11.—Bobby Riggs, the defending champion, took it easy in the opening round of the men's national indoor tennis tournament today—so easy, in fact, he dropped six games before eliminating Ed Overholser, Oklahoma City, 6—3, 6—3.

It was the first of two appearances scheduled today for the Chicagoan, seeded No. 1. He plays his second-round match late tonight.

After Riggs finished his unneeded workout, Frank Kovacs, the Oakland, Calif., funny man, took the court against Henry Browne, of Oklahoma City and kept the crowd in an uproar as he clowned to 6—0, 6—3 victory.

Kovacs Clowns

After sounding out his opponent in the first set, the third-seeded Kovacs began swinging his racquet with either hand, or both, and returned Browne's best volleys from every position except on his head.

Normally right-handed, Kovacs didn't hold the racquet in his right hand once during the last two games.

Frank Guernsey, of Houston, Tex., who held the national collegiate title in 1938 and 1939, loafed through his first round match, defeating Kelly West, jr., Oklahoma City youngster, 6—1, 6—1.

Wayne Sabin, of Portland, Oreg., former national indoor champion and fourth seeded, never removed his sweater as he toyed with F. G. McMurry, Oklahome City, ousting him, 6—0, 6—3.

Kramer Advances

Fifth seeded Jack Kramer, of Belvidere Gardens, Calif., who holds the Nation's outdoor doubles title along with Ted Schroeder, found Walter Mead, of the University of Oklahoma net squad, a little difficult to handle, but finally advanced to the second round, 8—6, 6—3.

Bil Talbert, of Cincinnati, seeded No. 6, eliminated Harold Thurman, of Oklahoma City, 6—1, 6—1.

Before the seeded players appeared for the first time, several first round winners completed their second round matches.

Frank McElwee, of the University of Arkansas, at Fayetteville, scored his second victory of the tourney, eliminating a University of Oklahoma player, Bob Davis, 6—4, 7—5.

Hicks Shoots 79 for Medal

By the Associated Press

Belleair, Fla., March 11.—Elizabeth Hicks, of Long Beach, Calif., shot a one-under-par 79—41 plus 38—today over the Belleview Biltmore course to take the medal in a field of over 100 entries in the annual Women's Belleair tournament.

Following with 80's were Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, Ga., 1940 winner, 37-43; Dorothy Gardner, of Steubenville, Ohio, 41-39, and Mary Agnes Wall, of Menominee, Mich., 39-41.

Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., was alone with 42-39—81, while Mrs. Tom Gallatin, of Tampa, shot 41-41—82; Mrs. Helen Hockenjos, jr., of Lake Hoptacong, N. J., 41-42—83, and Mrs. Mark McGarry, of St. Petersburg, former Southern and State titleholder, 45-41—84.

Mehl, Munski Efaw Here for W.A.A. Meet

Three of the world's top trackmen already are here and others are expected today as the Washington Athletic Association sets the stage for its indoor games at Uline's Arena Saturday afternoon and night.

The meet, which will officially terminate the local indoor track season, will involve outstanding open, college and scholastic athletes and will introduce some of the greatest names in track and field history.

Walter Mehl, the world champion mile runner, representing the National Youth Association from Wisconsin; Forrest Efaw, the steeplechase wizard, and John Munski, another great miler, who competed in the Catholic University meet Monday night, all are holding over here for workouts prior to Saturday's competition.

Meadows Due Soon

Earle Meadows, world champion pole vaulter, who set a new world indoor record of 14 feet 7⅛ inches in the Knights of Columbus games in Madison Square Garden last Saturday night, is expected to report here hourly to complete training for competition in a star-studded field.

Coach Robert Gigenback, of Fordham University, announced yesterday that he would enter a team of ten men in the collegiate competition.

Gigenback reportedly will be out to win the collegiate team title from Georgetown University, which will be prominently represented. The hot rivalry between the Georgetown and Fordham athletes has been enlivened by the inability of the coaches to get together in a race involving their varsity relay teams.

Penn Entered

Other colleges to be represented Saturday night will include University of Pennsylvania, Lehigh, Duke, Richmond University, Washington and Lee, Wake Forest, North Carolina, Maryland, Catholic University, American University, Gallaudet, Mount St. Mary's, George Washington, William and Mary, Loyola of Baltimore, Western Maryland and Johns Hopkins.

Fordham's team will include some of the Nation's greatest college stars. John Campbell, William Strachan, Albert Glenn, Walter Carey, Frank Leary, Edward Shine, Peter Callery, Art Schmidlein, Hugh Bennett and one other entry to be named will represent the Rams.

More than 15 world famous athletes will invade from out of town to compete in the open class. The competition will include interscholastic, intercollegiate, open and Federal worker events and also a relay for United States armed forces. The District Amateur Athletic Union also is sponsoring the 300-yard run.

Coach Dorsey Griffith, who made an outstanding success of the Catholic University games, has aligned himself with the Washington A. A. Games and will go his limit in an effort to make them an unqualified success. Tickets for Saturday's games are on sale at the Young Men's Shop, Fairway Sports Shop, the Sport Center and Uline's Arena and are priced at 75 cents, $1.10 and $1.65.

Bethesda Five Rated High in Duke Tourney

Special Dispatch to The Post

Durham, N. C., March 11.—With every team boasting a State or district championship, the field in the third annual Duke-Durham Southern high school basketball tournament is the best in the short but brilliant history of the affair.

From Thursday night's opener between Greenville, S. C., and Roanoke, Va., to the finals Saturday night, every game is expected to be a great battle as the teams fight for the unoffical championship of the South.

The Greenville-Roanoke game opens up play Thursday night at 8 o'clock. Also on the Thursday night card will be Durham's defending champions against John Marshall, of Richmond, Va. That game is billed for 9:30.

Bethesda in Action

The other two first-round games will be played Friday morning with Lafayette High, of Lexington, Ky., battling Bethesda, of Chevy Chase, Md., at 9:30, and Roosevelt, of Washington, D. C., mixing it up with Boys High, of Atlanta, Ga., at 11 o'clock.

The semifinals will be played Friday night with the Durham-Richmond, Greenville-Roanoke winners meeting at 8 o'clock and the Lexington-Chevy Chase, Washington-Atlanta winners coming together at 9:30. The finals are scheduled for 8:30 Saturday night.

Durham's defending champions were seeded No. 1 in the drawings and the other teams were drawn out of the hat. The Durham boys have won the tournaments for the past two years and are rated one of the outstanding teams this year although the tourney looms as a wide open affair.

The Durham outfit won the North Carolina State title, Greenville won the South Carolina tournament, Jefferson, of Roanoke, captured the Virginia title. Roosevelt, of Washington, won the Intercity championship and Bethesda won the suburban Washington title. John Marshal won 14 straight games but lost out in the State title race to Roanoke by 1 point. Boys High dropped the Georgia championship to Savannah by 1 point. Lafayette High, of Lexington, was a leading team in the Kentucky race.

The Bethesda team looms as the tourney favorite if one can be named. The boys from Maryland made a fine showing in last year's affair and have the same team back this season with added strength.

Pennsylvania Set For Game Restocking

Harrisburg, Pa., March 11 (AP).—More than 60,000 mature ringneck pheasants and 20,000 bobwhite quail will soon be released in Pennsylvania hunting grounds, says Seth Gordon, director of the State Game Commission.

Gordon said this would be the largest number of game birds ever stocked in the springtime and added that the commission had already released more than 65,000 rabbits as part of its restocking program.

Sun Inplay Scores Nose Victory in Tamiami at Tropical

$5.30 Shot Closes Fast To Nip Field

Commencement Bows At Wire; Remarkable Takes Third Money In Blanket Finish

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., March 11.—The Tamiami Purse, a 6-furlong dash for veteran sprinters, brought the most exciting blanket finish of the meeting here today. Of the nine starters in the $1,200 event, five pounded down to the wire with their h- - all bobbing together. Sun Inplay, a $5.30 for $2 choice from K. A. Veit's barn, nosed out Mrs. R. Miller's lightly backed Commencement for the lion's share of the purse.

Behind this pair, in the order named, came Remarkable, Bashi Bazouk and Sherron Ann. The other four horses were not disgraced in the defeat. The time was 1:11 flat.

Remarkable, noted for his early speed, cut out the running with little effort. He sprinted several lengths into the clear before the others settled into their best strides. Turning into the short stretch, Remarkable still had plenty of daylight to spare. Then it happened—horses seemed to swarm around him and it was anybody's race. Sun Inplay, third most of the way, closed fastest of all under "Red" Howell, but he barely got his nose in front of the forward-running Commencement at the finish line.

SUGARAGE assumed a short lead in the opening quarter mile, was rated along under a slight restraint, but came wide turning into the stretch and lost ground, but finished gamely to set up in the last few strides. WHA HAE, on the inside and in close attendance of the pace throughout, took command in the stretch, but Haskell grew careless and tossed the race off. BILLY BEE, under pressure from the start, went well up and just lasted to stave off DICTY STEP'S bid.

AERIAL BOMB set a fast pace in the early running, but faltered when challenged. HIGHSCOPE, hard driven from the start, could never keep pace with the leaders.

SUN INPLAY, vigorously ridden while in a forward position from the start, continued gamely when the final issue came to wear the leaders down in the closing strides. Selections at Tropical Park

Dear Al:

Every once in a while I get caught in my own backwash. For instance, B. J. Cassasa, who was quite an athlete at Tech High, writes regarding a contest: "Why not run a contest to see who can pick the most losers. All you'd have to do is get in it and you'd win it yourself." Thank you, Pal. Received a letter from Danny Scocca, a Washington jockey, who has been riding this winter in Cuba. He says it has been mighty tough for the American boys to get mounts over there and that they will all be glad to get back to Maryland. Scocca and his pretty wife are living with Mr. and Mrs. Buddy Root and Mr. and Mrs. Pappy Witmer. They have a house. Scocca is going to be back in time for Bowie's opening and if anybody is looking for a good, light boy, he will be on the job. Root and Witmer are going to stay until the close of the meeting. Bob Curran, who used to train the big stable for the late Walter O'Hara, is at Bowie with five horses of his own and one for Richard DuPont. Curran brings out that O'Hara was first to raise the claiming purses from $800 to $1,000. The selections didn't do half bad yesterday, if you care to check and that goes for Friend Casassa. Track Superintendent Dick Pending locked the gates on the Bowie track when the snow came. It was a smart move, because when the snow melts the track will not be all cut up. Frank Cronan, of the Hialeah Park publicity department, and formerly "Lucky Lefty," is back in town after turning out a swell job at the Florida track.

BILL.

First race—TRUE HEART has been knocking around long enough to warrant a selection in this field of maiden juveniles. Breaks from a good position and I'm going to string along. KEEKEE ran a good race at Hialeah and may be prominent. PONY BALLET has speed and probably will be a factor.

Second race — SARGAZO has speed and a bit of class that may make him first to the wire in this sprint affair. Everything looks right but the weight and he may overcome the impost. GAYSET could be dangerous in a field of this sort. GOLD BAND to take care of the others.

Third race—PUNTA FINAL meets maidens in this field and could be the right one. Garner will do the booting and I'm going to take my chances. FARRAGO and FASHION LADY probably are best of the others.

Fourth race—RANGE DUST gets the light weight of this party and promises to do a lot of running. The outside post may help. CARDINALIS has speed and is a threat. CALORY will be hard to keep out of the money circle.

Fifth race—Meeting her own kind in this sprint for fillies, LIGHT AS AIR may take the top and stay there. She will have Roberts to do the booting and deserves the call. SILVESTRA is good and looms as the probable favorite. ROSE ANITA is a possibility.

Sixth race—KAHYRITE may surprise this gang at fair odds. This one is better than generally rated. YAWL and OUR FLORENCE are as fit as recent good efforts and will battle it out if I have over-estimated the ability of the top one.

Seventh race—NO SIR gets the call in this field. Likes the route and is not too highly placed DRUDGERY has speed and is dangerous. VISIGOTH to take care of the minor award.

Eighth race—CAVE HILL meets the right company in the day's finale. Likes the long route and will be right in there knocking. BAILIWICK and PICK OUT to fill out the money bracket.

Best Bet—No Sir.

Giants Hit Hard To Beat Nats, 11-6

Carthy, stirred up a triple to center at this point.

Cliff Melton pitched the first three innings for the Giants and the Nats dented him for only one run. Cecil Travis scored it all by himself with a line drive homer over the right field screen.

It was against the veteran Carl Hubbell that the Nats made the most progress. They scored four runs on two hits in the fifth, Hubbell leading the bases with walks. Buddy Lewis delivered a long double to right center to score three runs and Travis moved Lewis home with his third straight hit, a single to left.

In the last three innings, the Giants came up with Ace Adams, a right hander from Nashville, and he sort of put the quietus on the Nats by allowing no hits whatsoever.

Jimmy Bloodworth contributed the defensive feature of the day when he nose-dived for a catch of Witek's line drive in the ninth inning with two Giants on base . . . George Archie got the ball out of the infield once in four times at bat and dropped a perfect throw to first . . . In contrast to Jack Sanford, his rival for the first base job, who powdered a single to leftfield as a pinch-hitter . . . Tomorrow Bucky Harris will unveil some of his better pitching when Sid Hudson, Ken Chase and Arnold Anderson take the mound against the Giants at Tinker Field.

Forte Comes Here to Train For Corchado

Tommy Forte, former National Golden Gloves bantamweight champion, now No. 1 bantamweight contender in the pro ranks, will come to Washington Saturday to hold a public workout in preparation for his 10-round battle Monday night at Turner's Arena.

Forte, who meets Victor Corchado, will work at Huron gymnasium, 511 Eleventh Street Northwest, at 2 p. m. Corchado, who claims the Puerto Rican featherweight championship, will work out at Huron an hour earlier.

Matchmaker Gabe Menendez yesterday said Herman Taylor, Philadelphia promoter, will come to Washington Monday to talk over prospects of rematching Forte with Lou Salica, world's bantamweight champion.

Forte and Salica drew a $16,000 gate in Philadelphia recently, and Menendez will attempt to persuade Taylor to bring the return fight to Washington's Griffith Stadium this summer. Forte defeated Salica in their first meeting but was beaten in Philadelphia.

The 8-round semifinal Monday night offers Pedro Hernandez, Al Weil's Puerto Rican featherweight, against Johnny Marcelline, of Philadelphia. In a six, El Brookman meets El Franklin, Oscar Wright fights Bobby Wood in another six, and Johnny Thomas fights Wilbert Reabis in the 4-round opener.

Yipee! Rodeo's Coming to Uline For 11-Day Show

The thrills of the wild and wooly west will come to Washington March 27 for 11 days when Col. Jim Eskew presents his JE Bar Ranch World Championship Rodeo at Uline Arena. The Rodeo will run through April 6 with Saturday and Sunday matinees scheduled for March 29 and 30 and April 5 and 6.

Cowboys throughout the West will head East seeking the thousands of dollars in cash prizes and hundreds of dollars worth of equipment, such as spurs, saddles, chaps, etc. Competitors will vie in over 25 events consisting of calf roping, broncho-busting, bull-dogging and steer and bull riding. Many classes for cowgirls have also been established and have drawn full fields in most instances.

Featured will be screen cowboy Gene Autry, who will take the leading role with his famous horses, "Champion" and "Champion Jr." Autry will demonstrate the thoroughness of Champion's training and will complete his stunt with a thrilling leap through a fiery hoop.

Market Closes With Minor Recessions After Feeble Attempt to Extend Rally

New York, March 11.—Buying confidence waned in today's stock market and an attempt to extend yesterday's sharp rally generally proved unsuccessful. The list edged forward at the start in lively dealings. Trends were soon reversed, however, and activity slackened. Leaders shifted over a narrowly lower range until the final hour when further recessions werein order.

While scattered favorites managed to keep ahead, closing declines of fractions to a point or more were well distributed. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .1 of a point at 41.7. Transfers of 507,640 shares compared with 620,610 the day before.

The outlook for a speed-up in defense spending still was an important market prop, brokers said, but it was noted that prices actually dipped when the House passed the amended British-aid bill and sent it to the President. Word the Chief Executive would immediately ask Congress for a $7,000,000,000 appropriation to carry out the program also brought scant response. The thought thata sharp boost in taxes was in the offing, it was suggested, may have been a speculative offset here.

Business news, including more favorable earnings statements and dividends, was helpful, although there even were exceptions here. Little inspiration was derived from war developments and growing labor rifts served to dim the industrial picture.

Among stocks on the losing end were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Crucible Steel, Geenral Motors, Chrysler, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft, Santa Fe, Great Northern, Chesapeake & Ohio, Anaconda, Kennecott, American Smelting, Loft, Texas Corporation, Westinghouse, General Electric, Western Union and Consolidated Edison.

A shade improved at the finish were American Telephone, Standard Oil of N. J., American Can, International Harvester, U. S. Rubber, Allied Chemical, Johns-Manville, Eastman Kodak and Woolworth. J. I. Case was up 2 points on a limited turnover.

Rail bonds did fairly well in an otherwise uneven loans department. U. S. Governments weakened. Some commodities shook off some of their recent buoyancy. Futures of Tin, Cocoa, Rubber and Silk exhibited quiet strength butSugar, Hides and Copper were reactionary.

Alluminum of America was up 5 at one time in the Curb. It cut this in half at tahe last. Holding plus signs were American Cyanamid "B," Gulf Oil, Lake Shore, Hazeltine, Quaker Oats and Todd Shipyards. In arrears were American Gas, Pennroad, Sunray and Venezuelan Petroleum. Trades here amounted to about 83 shares versus 154,000 Monday.

Connely Urges Finance Body To Aid Defense

Special Dispatch to The Post

Boston, March 11.—Creation of a division of finance of the National Defense Advisory Commission was advocated today by Emmett F. Connely, president of the Investment Bankers Association of America.

In a speech prepared for delivery before the Boston Advertising Club, Connely said:

"There are experts in every other line of industry working on materials, on prices, on production, or priorities, or labor, but no one has the responsibility of studying, planning and carrying out the great problem of financing the defense billions. Capable and effective as the Treasury and R. F. C. are, there should be an independent division to carry out this work.

"There should be a finance division manned by experts who would counsel Government agencies and make sure that just as much of this financing be done through private channels as possible, so as to leave Government credit as unburdened as possible for jobs it simply must take care of."

Cannely said a task equally important which such a finance division could perform would relate to plans for the economic readjustment that must be made when the emergency passes.

"The transition from a war economy to normal peacetime operations will put the American way of life to the acid test," the ilnvestment banker said. "It will not be found wanting if we face the post-war period with a blue print, necessarily flexible, but one which will lay plans for peacetime conversion of plants and methods for utilizing excesss capacities in the various industries now engaged in the necessary, but tragic, task of producing war products."

Idea Revived For Big Board, Curb Merger

By the Associated Press

New York, March 11.—The World-Telegram said today the long-discussed idea of a merger of the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Curb Exchange, the country's two largest organized security markets, has been formulated into a tentative plan for study by governors of both exchanges.

The plan, the newspaper reported, would save the exchanges and member firms about $1,000,000 annually and further concentrate security dealings under the roof of the Stock Exchange at Broad and Wall Streets. The Curb list, it was explained, would become a department of the Stock Exchange.

With the smallest share dealings on record in relation to stocks listed, the Stock Exchange has had an engineering firm making a broad study to find where economies in operation might be achieved. The merger idea is being studied as part of the general investigation.

Officials of both institutions pointed out the proposal has been discussed freely in brokerage circles for many months, but said they were unaware of any early steps to carry it into a concrete proposal for action.

To Investors Who Value System in Investments, We Suggest One of These 8 Pre-Planned Portfolios

Regardless of your financial position, one of our eight portfolios will help you plan your investments systematically. Hundreds of investors have been aided since we made this new series of Pre-Planned Portfolios available a few weeks ago, and we are therefore suggesting that you, too, will find one or more of them helpful.

These plans merit your consideration now, whether or not you contemplate an immediate investment. For instance, a comparison of these carefully analyzed, thoroughly integrated portfolios with your own holdings may suggest a means by which you can effect an improvement in your position without additional capital outlay. Here is an outline of the eight plans with approximate yields:

Plan A ($ 2,000)-for salaried people or small business men... 7.05%
Plan B ($ 5,000)-for young business men and women..... 6.03%
Plan C ($ 10,000)-of special interest to professional people.. 5.62%
Plan D ($ 15,000)-features liberal income and wide diffusion of risk.. 6.89%
Plan E ($ 25,000)-offers excellent outlook for capital appreciation.. 5.64%
Plan F ($ 50,000)-a well-balanced program with many interesting features.. 6.37%
Plan G ($100,000)-for retired executives and estate trustees.. 4.05%
Plan H ($500,000)-one of the most completely integrated investment programs ever developed.. 5.03%

Please remember that these eight plans have been built to meet average situations. You can find out if they meet yours simply by requesting the plan that interests you, or all of them if you like. We will gladly send them to you, or, if you prefer, visit our office for a personal discussion with one of our partners or Account Executives. Regardless of the amount involved, we would be most happy to have a chance to assist you. Won't you give us the opportunity?

Sincerely yours,

George A. Garrett

May Contracts Set New High In Wheat List

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 11.—May wheat contracts continued the current upward movement for the fourth consecutive session today, reaching a new high at 87 cents, but the deferred deliveries finished minor fractions under the previous close.

Trade interest centered in political news from Washington. Factors favoring the upturn were improved milling demand, a better inquiry for exports, strength in cotton, the possibility of a higher Government loan rate on new crops and a belief in some quarters that wheat might be shipped after the President had signed the lend-lease bill.

The new-crop months, July and September, also touched new highs for the current movement at 83⅞ and 84⅜, respectively, but profit-taking sales, coupled with lighter buying power, due in part to a disinclination to follow the three-day advance aggressively, caused a reaction.

Wheat closed ¼ off to ⅞ cents higher than Monday's finil prices, May 86⅛@87, July 83¼@83¾; corn was ¼ to ⅝ up, May 62½, July 62⅝@62¾; oats advanced ¼ to ⅜; rye was ⅛ off to 1 cent up, and lard declined 5 to 7½ cents.

A report that the Commodity Credit Corporation owned only 400,000 bushels of wheat, which it intended to hold, accentuated the relative scarcity of counry marketings which was reflected in the action of the May contract. The CCC said that wheat prices had now risen to the point where producers could redeem their loan stocks and sell to the trade instead of allowig the corporation to take title.

Exporters reported a further inquiry for Canadian wheat from the United Kingdom and estimated sales this week at between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000 bushels.

Twenty-Ninth's Lone Selectee

ROWLAND EDWARDS

Lone Selectee In 29th Gets Glad Hand

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Correspondent

Fort George G. Meade, Md., March 11.—The Twenty-ninth Division woke up today to the fact that it had a selectee in its ranks and immediately began stirring things up to find out how he got there.

This lone selectee, who has been attached to Headquarters Company, Special Troops, is a Washington man. He showed up after midnight Saturday, the only selectee yet assigned to the division.

Private Rowland Edwards has been a lawyer in Washington for 8 of his 32 years. A member of the firm of Smith & Edwards, he lived until last Tuesday with his wife, Mrs. Mary Edwards, at 1401 Columbia Road Northwest. Then he was called up by his local board, passed by the doctors and sent to Baltimore for induction.

From Baltimore he was sent to Camp Lee, Va., and from there he arrived at the Fort Meade reception center Saturday night.

Headquarters Company, Special Troops, was delighted to get him. It happens that 14 of the company's 42 men were in hospital with colds and Private Edwards, no matter how mysteriously he had come into its midst, was welcome. Even so, they gave him Sunday to rest after his travels and his sleepless Saturday night.

Monday Private Edwards spent on kitchen police, peeling potatoes, cleaning pots and scrubbing up about the mess hall. Today he was assigned to the coal detail.

Headquarters Company was pleased that the newcomer in its midst took to such unmilitary labor without complaint. Headquarters Company is reduced to such straits that sergeants are sweeping floors and corporals are digging drainage ditches.

The company's new private was born in Blue Rapids, Kans., and attended the College of Emporia and Chicago University before receiving his law degree at George Washington University in 1933. His wife is employed by the Veterans' Administration and he and his partner, Preston Smith, maintained offices at 1319 F Street.

Gen. Pratt Visits 29th Division Again

Fort George G. Meade, Md., March 11.—Maj. Gen. Harry C. Pratt, commanding the Second Army Corps, today paid his second visit to the Twenty-ninth Division since it entered camp here and found training slowed but not halted by a blanket of mud.

After conferring with Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, division commander, Gen. Pratt made a tour of the division cantonment and inspected the nearby camps of the 191st Tank Battalion and the 105th Antitank Battalion. With him were Maj. Harry V. Ryder, his aide, and Col. John W. Downer, corps artillery officer.

Listen! with Glynn

Maybe you think the income tax, like the English joke, is nothing to be laughed at!

But before you get grim about the thing, which presumably will be shortly before midnight on March 15, you might get what humorous consolation out of it you can by listening to Fred Allen tonight as he and his "Mighty Allen Art Players" present their production of an original playlet provocatively titled "IT."

In case "IT" seems a little baffling, the question might be added, what about the income tax isn't? But "IT" in this case stands for "Income Tax" and to save what confusion he can Fred has subtitled the play, "What Happened To IT?" The cast, with Fred himself playing a role called "Mr. Whiskers," consists of Kenny (Personal Exemption) Baker; Portland (Interest on Bank Deposits) Hoffa; Al (Other Deductions Authorized by Law) Goodman; and the Art (Item 6, Minus Item 11) Players, as well as the Hugh (Interest Paid) Martin Singers.

But the "Mighty Allen Art Players" production will be only a part of the net long-term capital gain to be considered from listening to the "Star Theater" which you'll hear over WJSV from 9 to 10 p. m. In addition there'll be a net income of music and guests.

The Post Radio Highlights

11:15 a. m., WOL—From the garden of the Red Cross Building comes the birthday celebration of Jane Delano, founder of the American Red Cross Nurses Training Corps.

3 p. m., WJSV—One of the more surprising radio success stories is told when Mary Margaret McBride examines the Court of Missing Heirs as a feature of her regular Wednesday afternoon series on air programs.

7, WRC—"Black Rust" is a term you may not recall but your parents will. It was the blight which swept the golden wheat fields of the '80s and threatened international disaster. Cavalcade of America dramatizes the adage that truth is stranger than fiction.

8, WMAL—Dr. Preston Bradley, churchman and author, is this week's observer of the Quiz Kids mental antics.

8:30, WOL—After being an aerial off-agin'-on-agin'-Finagin, locally at least, Boake Carter is promised for Mutual's Capital listeners. Positively, they say.

9, WRC—Hattie McDaniel, "Gone With the Wind's Mammy," made a good impression on Eddie Cantor last week when he interviewed her about the post of nursemaid to the Mysterious Little Joe. Charlie Chaplin joins the actress as comic's guests tonight.

9, WJSV—Elinor Glyn's "It" has nothing what ever to do with Fred Allen's "It." His "It" stands for Income Tax, which certainly he dramatizes to the nth deduction in preparation for the fifteenth.

10, WRC—Kay Kyser jumps a few days, too, it being his notion to move March seventeenth to the twelth and hear the harpies harp.

11, WOL—New York's Golden Glove champs prepare for their coming meeting with the Windy City scrappers.

Escape Lung Co-Inventor's Rites Friday

Funerals services for Lieut Clarence L. Tibbals, 56, co-inventor of the Navy's submarine escape lung who died Monday in Miami Beach, Fla., will be held at 2 p. m. Friday in Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Lieut. Tibbals

Lieut. Tibbals served 30 years in the Navy, and worked into the design for the escape lung his own experience as a salvage diver. His work as chief diving supervisor in salvaging the Navy's submarine S-51, sunk in a collison off Provinceton, Mass., in 1927, won him the Navy Cross.

For his share in developing and testing the escape lung, now standard dequipment on all Navy submarines he was rewarded with the Distinguished Service Medal, along with Lieut. C. B. Momsen, who aided in the work.

Retired in 1932

He retired from the Navy in 1932, and since then had been consulting engineer and Washington representative of the Mine Safety Appliance Co. of Pittsburgh, which manufactures the lung and other devices.

Lieut. Tibbals had lived in Washington since 1927. Surviving is his wife, Mrs. Josephine V. Tibbals, of 4622 Broad Branch Road Northwest.

Friends of the family said that death was attributed to a heart attack. He went to Florida a week ago, and was stricken Saturday. Frank M. Hobson, civilian engineer of the Navy Bureau of Construction and Repair, who collaborated in designing the lung, expressed the belief that the veteran diver's work as a "human guinea pig" had contributed to the weakening of his heart.

A native of Roanoke, Ind., Lieut. Tibbals entered the Navy in 1902. He was appointed a gunner in 1912, and promoted to a lieutenant in the World War.

He started diving in 1914, and in 1916 he was placed in charge of the Navy's diving school at Newport, R. I. During the World War he was assistant wreck master for the American forces in Europe, and his division raised or salvaged some 500 vessels along the French coast.

After the war he was in command of the salvage vessel Falson, later used in the Squalus rescue. He was commended for salvaging the burning Navy oil tanker, Alameda, in 1921, again for raising the sunken German submarine U-111 from the Delaware River in 1922.

He began his part in the experimental work on the escape lung in 1925. In later recommending a decoration for Lieut. Tibbals' contribution to the lung, the Navy Department said:

"... he repeatedly, courageously and voluntarily performed feats at great personal risk in order to prove the correctness of the theory and construction of the apparatus."

Fund for Hero In Gun Battle Nears $300

With nearly $300 already collected, the "thank you" fund for Jon Francis, 20, who was critically wounded trying to apprehend a gunman, February 27, probably will reach $1,000 by March 20, the deadline, Police Inspector James F. Beckett disclosed yesterday.

Chairman of a committee named by Police Chief Ernest W. Brown, Beckett said only two of the 17 police units have completed collections and that the sum amounted to about $80. More than $200 has been mailed to Maj. Brown and the newspapers, Beckett said.

Francis has gained steadily at Emergency Hospital, where he is confined with a bullet wound in his chest. Doctors said he probably will be allowed to go home next week.

The youth, an employe of the Greyhound bus terminal, was shot by Murphy Hubbs while the latter was attempting to escape police. Hubbs killed himself on a parking lot at Eleventh and H Streets Northwest, a few seconds before Policeman Lawrence Buscher shot at him.

Francis, only support of his widowed mother, lives in Arlington, Va.

PALE, TIRED WOMEN

Supply the Blood and Nerves with Iron and Vitamin B1

Thousands of women and girls over 14 are not getting enough iron to make rich red blood, and not enough Vitamin B1 for proper functioning of the nerves.

When the iron lost each month is not replaced, these women often feel tired, cold, worn out. They have pale lips and pale cheeks. Their shortage of Vitamin B1 affects the nerves, dulls the appetite, and disturbs digestion. These women should try ENRICH, the tasty new preparation which supplies extra iron and Vitamin B1. No habit-forming drugs, no alcohol, no liver.

Each day's ENRICH furnishes more iron for the blood than 4 pounds of beefsteak or 7 pounds of spinach . . . And more Vitamin B1 than ½ pound of baker's yeast. Best of all, ENRICH tastes good and costs only a few cents daily.

When iron is restored to the blood and the body is fully supplied with Vitamin B1, it usually follows that good color comes back to the cheeks and lips, appetite returns, nerves function better, and you feel peppy again. We will refund your money unless one bottle of ENRICH satisfactorily helps you feel better, look better, eat better, and sleep better. Start now!

Primping for the Dentists

Most good-looking faces have large teeth, Dr. Walter J. Pryor, of Cleveland, declared yesterday. He addressed the afternoon session of the Five State Post Graduate Clinic at the Mayflower Hotel on 'Present Day Advances in the Art of Producing Lifelike Dentures."

"Too many people want their false teeth to be too light in color and too small," he said. 'Small teeth are as much of a disfigurement as small eyes or a small nose.

"Making teeth," he added, "is like painting a picture. You may have all the materials, but the skill is essential."

Dr. Pryor discussed the strides dentistry has made in experiments with plastics in the production of lifelike dentures. He said that while the advantage of teeth made of plastics lies in the fact that they have no pins and will not break so easily, it has not been definitely proven that plastic dentures are superior in all respects.

Dr. Howard H. Burkart, of Atlanta, Ga., professor of dentistry at Children Atlanta-Southern Dental College, discussed operative procedures for deciduous and young permanent teeth. "Control of Physical Forces Exerted by Removable Partial Dentures" was discussed by Dr. Ernest R. Granger, of Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Dr. L. G. Jordan, professor of denture prosthetics at Georgetown University; Dr. Lester W. Burket, instructor in oral diagnosis at the University of Pennsylvania Dental School, and Dr. Fred W. Hines, of Dallas, Tex., dean of the college of dentistry at Baylor University, read treatises at the morning session.

Officials Urge Civic Service

A conference of educators and Federal officials at the Raleigh Hotel yesterday concluded that the American people must be encouraged to do things for their own communities as well as understand democracy in a theoretical sense.

Representatives of the Interior Department, the Labor Department and the Federal Security Agency took part in the discussion with leaders of the National Education-Recreation Council.

The conference launched a series of meetings to plan a training program in civic responsibility. The program would be administered jointly by privately supported educational and recreational founda- and the Government agencies.

J. Edward Sproul, program director of the national council of Y. M. C. A.'s, was chairman of the conference. Katherine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department, spoke at the luncheon meeting.

Several speakers emphasized the need for sufficient security in family and work relationships to provide an incentive for the individual to function more completely as a citizen.

E. R. Buckner Dies; Famous As Prosecutor

By the Associated Press

New York, March 11.—Emory Roy Buckner, 63, former United States Attorney whose prosecution of scandals in the Harding Administration brought him national repute, died today following a brief illness.

An opponent once said of Buckner, regarded as a brilliant, painstaking trial lawyer: "My friend Buckner can drive documents four abreast and make them jump through hoops."

He was the prosecutor of Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, and former Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty, indicted in scandals which grew out of the Harding Administration. Miller was convicted of conspiracy to defraud the Government, but two trials of Daugherty ended in disagreement.

Buckner was responsible for sending Earl Carroll to prison as a result of the showman's notorious champagne party.

Born in Pottawatomie County, Iowa, the son of a Methodist minister, Buckner was graduated from the Nebraska University in 1904 and gained his law degree at Harvard in 1907. The following year he was admitted to the New York bar and became a member of the United States Attorney's staff.

Two years after he became an assistant to New York District Attorney Charles S. Whitman, and when the Board of Aldermen in 1912 began an inquiry into official corruption, he was chosen to be its legal guide.

His prosecution resulted in conviction of a number of police officials and exposed links between organized vice and the police, as a result of which his drastic recommendations later were incorporated into police regulations.

For a time, he returned to private practice but in 1923 Calvin Coolidge appointed him U. S. attorney for this district.

Soon after he resigned his Federal post in 1927, Gov. Alfred E. Smith appointed him to investigate a sewer scandal in Queens County.

Court Exonerates General Motors Sales Corp.

General Motors Sales Corporation was exonerated by the District Court yesterday of charges of persecuting a former employe after he gave testimony befort the Federal Trade Commission.

Entering the first judgment of his visit to the bench here, Federal Judge Alfred D. Barksdale, Lynchburg, Va., instructed a jury to find for the corporation.

Judge Barksdale held that George Smythe, Houston, Tex., had failed to establish the charges on which he sued here November 7, 1938, for a total of $170,000. Judge Barksdale upheld the claim of Attorneys Spencer Gordon and Edward Bruce Wallace, New York, that there was no showing upon which the jurors could consider the case.

Lawyer's Wife Kills Herself By Hanging

The 44-year-old wife of a Washington attorney and mother of three children was found hanged yesterday at her home, 3212 Macomb Street Northwest.

Mrs. Elliott

The body of Mrs. Grace K. Elliott was suspended by a bathrobe cord from a shower curtain rod in a second-floor bathroom.

Her husband, George E. Elliott, of the law firm of Mohun & Elliott, said his wife had suffered from melancholia, induced by ill health that had lasted about a year.

He said he had tried repeatedly throughout the morning to telephone Mrs. Elliott a message that would "cheer her up." He had been unable to contact her because, apparently, she had removed the telephone from the hook to forestall calls.

Elliott said he had felt his wife would be pleased to hear that he had arranged for their son, George E., jr., Lehigh University student, to take a selective service physical examination at a time that would not interfere with the family's plans to make a vacation trip together to South Carolina.

The attorney had talked with officials of his son's local board and determined that he could take the physical test at a time that would not conflict with the vacation journey.

It was this message the husband tried unsuccessfully to convey to Mrs. Elliott, beginning in midmorning. She was last seen alive at about noon when she gave a colored maid, Margie Carter, money with which to pay for an expected delivery from a neighborhood store. At about 2:45 the servant entered the bathroom and found the body.

Besides her husband and her son, George, she leaves another son, Robert K., and a daughter, Mrs. Robert C. Main, of Dallas, Tex.

Coroner A. Magruder McDonald issued a verdict of suicide last night.
